Schiavo right-to-die case: A man trying to carry out what he claims are his wife's wishes in a long-running right-to-die case asked two Florida courts Tuesday to stop delaying the removal of a feeding tube that helps keep the woman alive.

George Felos, the attorney for Michael Schiavo, asked Pinellas Circuit Court Judge George Greer to reconsider a seven-week delay on the removal of Terri Schiavo's feeding tube.

Howard Stern vs. FCC: Shock jock Howard Stern made a surprise call to a radio station during an interview of the Federal Communications Commission head, claiming the chairman only got his job because his father is Secretary of State Colin Powell.

Stern called in to KGO-AM radio in San Francisco during a live interview Tuesday with FCC Chairman Michael Powell. After claiming Powell consistently avoids him, Stern began to question his credentials.

"How did you get your job? It is apparent to most of us in broadcasting that your father got you your job, and you kind of sit there and you're the judge, you're the arbiter, you're the one who tells us what we can and can't say on the air," Stern said. "And yet I really don't even think you're qualified to be the head of the commission."

Powell, a Republican, was appointed to the commission by President Clinton in 1997 and became chairman when President Bush took office in 2001. Powell denied Stern's charge.

O.J. Simpson settlement: A friend of O.J. Simpson has been named in a federal court regarding the finances of the former football star, who was acquitted of double murder but slapped with a $33.5 million settlement that remains unpaid to the victims' families.

Alfred Beardsley must appear Nov. 23 in Los Angeles Superior Court in Santa Monica. The order, issued Tuesday, was in the request of Fred Goldman, whose son Ron was killed in 1996 along with Nicole Brown Simpson.

Fenway Park death: An independent panel headed by former U.S. Attorney Donald K. Stern will investigate the death of a college student who was shot by Boston police using pepper pellet guns to subdue rowdy Red Sox fans after the team won the American League pennant.

Victoria Snelgrove, a junior at Emerson College, was killed last week when she was hit in the eye by a pellet fired by police as they tried to control the situation outside Fenway Park after the Red Sox beat their archrivals, the New York Yankees.

Two of the officers who fired pepper balls into the crowd weren't trained to use the weapons. The Boston Globe reported Wednesday.

Yasser Arafat's health: A blood test and an endoscopy on Yasser Arafat have dispelled suspicions he has cancer in his digestive tract, one of the Palestinian leader's doctors said Wednesday.

On Tuesday, a hospital official said Arafat, 75, was suffering from a large gallstone. The gallstone, while extremely painful, is not life-threatening and can be easily treated, the official said.

Arafat was examined by doctors at his headquarters in the West Bank city of Ramallah.

North Korean asylum-seekers: Chinese police detained 65 North Korean asylum-seekers hiding in two houses in Beijing, some not life-threatening and can be easily treated, the official said.

Flu shot shortage: Baldwin County residents form a winding line Tuesday as they wait to get into the Baldwin County Health Department for flu shots in Robertsdale, Ala. The health department will give out its supply of 1,430 shots in four days. Meanwhile, federal employees who face serious complications from the flu will be able to get free flu shots at work starting next week, the Health and Human Services Department said Tuesday. Some lawmakers and constituents said members of Congress should not be getting special treatment at a time when Americans are waiting in line for flu shots around the country.

sures" to round up refugees from its ally, North Korea.

Two South Korean human rights activists also were detained in the raid Tuesday on the Chinese capital's east side, South Korea's Yonhap news agency reported.

The detentions came amid a surge in large-scale asylum bids in recent weeks. Scores of North Koreans are in the Canadian and South Korean embassies and other foreign facilities in Beijing, waiting for permission to leave for South Korea.

WMD proliferation: The top U.S. envoy for arms control named North Korea, Iran and Syria among the worst proliferators of weapons of mass destruction Wednesday, and called for shipments to the countries to be monitored more closely.

"North Korea, Iran and Syria, among others, are clearly states of proliferation concern," U.S. Undersecretary of State John Bolton said in a speech at The American Center in Tokyo.

Bolton is visiting Japan to observe multinational exercises, held under President Bush's Proliferation Security Initiative, or PSI, aimed at training troops to intercept weapons of mass destruction at sea.

War on terrorism

Islamic cleric's trial: A militant Islamic cleric accused by the United States of being a key terror leader in Southeast Asia goes on trial Thursday, charged in the Bali bombings and the J.W. Marriott hotel attack in Jakarta, Indonesia.

The trial of Abu Bakar Bashir comes a week after President Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono took office in the world's most populous Muslim nation, and will be seen as a test of his election campaign promises to crack down on terrorism.

The 66-year-old Bashir was acquitted last year of separate terrorism charges. The verdict was widely criticized abroad.

An indictment names Bashir as the leader of Jemaah Islamiyah, the terror group blamed for the 2003 bombing of the Marriott and the 2002 Bali bombings. Eleven people died in the Marriott attack; 202 were killed on Bali.

Giltno detainees: A federal judge says he will not allow an 18-year-old Canadian held with other terror suspects at a U.S. naval station in Cuba to be examined to determine if he is mentally fit to help his defense.

U.S. District Judge John D. Bates ruled Tuesday that there is no legal basis to order a mental competence exam before Omar Khadr's status is reviewed by a military tribunal at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Khadr, who was 15 when U.S. forces captured him in Afghanistan, was wounded in a battle that killed a U.S. soldier and injured four others, the military says.

Accused lawyer: A veteran civil rights lawyer accused of helping terrorists on Tuesday denied ever violating prison rules designed to shut off a convicted terrorist she represented from the rest of the world.

The attorney, Lynne Stewart, firmly registered her denial from the witness stand in New York as she for a second day answered questions posed by her lawyer Michael Tiger.

Tiger aimed the defense at the core of evidence against Stewart — special administration measures, or SAMs, put in place by the government to stop Sheikh Omar Abdel-Rahman from communicating from prison with his followers in Egypt and elsewhere.

Stewart, 65, is charged with providing material support to terrorists, defrauding the government and making false statements for letting Abdel-Rahman's views on a cease-fire in Egypt reach followers. If convicted, she could face 20 years in prison.

Iraq travel ban: The Philippine government will stamp citizens' passports with a travel ban notice in a further attempt to keep them out of war-ravaged Iraq, the foreign secretary said Wednesday.

Despite a ban on travel to Iraq issued last July, at least 2,000 Filipinos searching for work have flocked to the country, reports said.

Middle East-bound Filipino workers will have their passports stamped with the notice "Not valid for travel to Iraq" to prevent them from sneaking into Iraq, Foreign Secretary Alberto Romulo said.

Despite the dangers, Filipinos risk their lives for work in Iraq to earn wages up to three times higher than in other Middle Eastern locations, he said.

Army keeping Iraq tours at 1 year

By ROBERT BURNS
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Army will shorten combat tours in Iraq next year from 12 months to six or nine months, as some had hoped, because that would undermine the war effort, the Army's top general said Tuesday.

Gen. Peter Schoomaker, the Army chief of staff, told a group of reporters that he would prefer shorter combat tours in Iraq but believes that cannot happen as long as the U.S. military is required to maintain roughly the 135,000 troops there now to fight the insurgency.

The Army and Marine Corps are preparing to maintain that level at least through the end of next year. Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld has said that if U.S.-trained and equipped Iraqi security forces become available in larger numbers next year, as expected, then U.S. troops levels may be reduced.

On a related matter, the Army's vice chief of staff, Gen. Richard

Schoomaker: Shorter tours would undermine war effort

Cody, said the Army has not been asked to accelerate the deployment of a fresh rotation of troops into Iraq. These include four brigades of the 3rd Infantry Division, which is scheduled to go there in January.

Some have cited the possibility of getting some parts of the 3rd Infantry to Iraq sooner to bolster the force in the final weeks before Iraq holds elections in late January.

"He hasn't asked for that," Cody said, referring to Gen. John Abizaid, the top U.S. commander in the Middle East. If asked, the Army could speed up some of the deployments, Cody said.

The 3rd Infantry, which spearheaded the drive to Baghdad in March and April 2003, has been reorganizing this year and will be the first division to make a return deployment to Iraq.

When the war began in March 2003, there was little debate ordered to stay even longer.

Schoomaker and Cody cited several drawbacks to shortening combat tours under current circumstances, which include an insurgency that continues to adapt its tactics of killing coalition and Iraqi forces.

Among them: ■ The fight against the insurgents will be more effective if there is not a frequent turnover of American troops, in part because on-the-ground experience pays dividends in understanding the enemy.

■ The effort to integrate U.S.-trained Iraqi forces into American fighting units in coming months will be more successful if they spend longer periods operating together.

■ National Guard and Reserve forces have to put in the same amount of pre-deployment training and preparation for going to Iraq regardless of whether they stay for six months or 12 months. Thus shorter tours would mean mobilizing and training more Guard and Reserve units, if the overall force requirement remains the same.

"You also have the dilemma of the operational commanders over there who say, you know, if you go to tours of six months you're only going to get about four months' use out of the force," because of the time it takes to get fully geared up for operations once arriving in Iraq, Schoomaker said.

"That means you're going to have constant handover of contacts with the local populace, which is exactly what you don't want to do in an insurgency," he added. "You want that continuity" that comes with longer tours.

British troops head toward Baghdad

Terror group threatens to kill Japanese hostage; GI killed in convoy attack

The Associated Press

BAGHDAD — Nearly 800 British forces left their bases in southern Iraq on Wednesday heading north toward Baghdad to replace U.S. troops who are expected to take part in an offensive against insurgent strongholds.

The deployment came hours after Iraq's most feared militant group released a video threatening to behead a Japanese captive within 48 hours unless Japan withdraws its troops from Iraq.

The British troops, headquartered in Basra, are heading to an area near the capital to replace U.S. troops who are expected to launch a major offensive against rebel areas west and north of the capital.

"We can confirm that there is some movement," said British military spokesman Maj. Charlie Mayo. He gave no specifics on troop numbers, citing security concerns.

Large flatbeds were seen carrying armored British vehicles up a road through Iraq's southern desert to Nasiriyah, 200 miles southeast of Baghdad, where it appeared the troops were stopping for the night.

Nearly 800 Scottish soldiers of the First Battalion, Black Watch are expected to be based in an area just south of the capital to free up American forces for an expected assault on the insurgent stronghold of Fallujah and other areas.

The move is part of a coalition effort to bring order to Iraq before elections in January.

British officials have been vague on the precise destination with some media reports indicating the Black Watch would be sent to Iskandariyah located north of Hilla.

The British soldiers' families expressed worry Wednesday that the redeployment puts the troops in greater danger.

"It wasn't a cakewalk in Basra, but it's going to be a lot, lot more dangerous up British Army Warrior armored vehicles are moved on trucks in a convoy moving from Basra, Iraq, toward Baghdad. there," said James Buchanan, 56, from Arbroath in central Scotland, who has two sons with the regiment in Iraq.

The American military wants the British to assume security responsibility in areas close to Baghdad, so U.S. Marines and soldiers can be shifted to insurgent strongholds west of the capital, including Fallujah.

Prime Minister Tony Blair's decision to agree to the U.S. request for redeployment is a politically sensitive one for the British leader, whose popularity has plummeted because of his support for the Iraq war.

Britain's 8,500 troops are based around the southern port city of Basra in a relatively peaceful area of Iraq. Sixty-eight British soldiers have been killed in Iraq, compared with more than 3,000 U.S. troops.

Japanese Minister Junichiro Koizumi rejected kidnappers' demands in the most recent hostage drama.

"The Self-Defense Forces will not withdraw," Koizumi told reporters in western Japan. "I cannot allow terrorism and cannot bow to terrorism."

The video's authenticity could not be independently confirmed, but the Japanese government later identified the captive as 24-year-old Shosei Koda.

The video, which lasted just under three minutes, bore the logo of al-Qaida in Iraq, the new name for Abu Musab al-Zarqawi's group, which was previously known as Tawhid and Jihad and has allied itself with Osama bin Laden. The group has claimed responsibility for the beheadings of Bigley, two American co-workers and Berg, as well as numerous car bombings and other attacks.

Also on Wednesday, a motorcycle bomber attacked a U.S. convoy in central Iraq, killing one American soldier and wounding another, the U.S. military said in a statement.

U.S. deaths in Iraq

The Associated Press

As of Tuesday, at least 1,108 members of the U.S. military have died since the beginning of the Iraq war in March 2003, according to an Associated Press count. At least 846 died as a result of hostile action, according to the Defense Department as of Tuesday. The figures include three military civilians.

The AP count is four higher than the Defense Department's tally, last updated Tuesday at 10 a.m. EDT.

The British military has reported 67 deaths: Italy, 19; Poland, 13; Spain, 11; Ukraine, nine; Bulgaria, seven; Slovakia, three; Estonia, Thailand and the Netherlands, two each; and Denmark, El Salvador, Hungary and Latvia have reported one death each.

Since May 1, 2003, when President Bush declared that major combat operations in Iraq had ended, 970 U.S. military members have died, according to AP's count. That includes at least 737 deaths resulting from hostile action, according to the military's numbers.

Since the start of U.S. military operations in Iraq, 8,150 U.S. service members have been wounded in hostile action, according to the Defense Department's weekly tally.

The latest death reported by the military was:

■ No deaths reported.

■ The latest identification reported by the military:

■ Army Sgt. Dennis J. Boles, 46, Homosassa, Fla.; died Sunday in Camp Arifjan, Kuwait after collapsing during a 10-mile road march; assigned to the Army National Guard's 171st Aviation Battalion, Brookville, Fla.

■ Marine Lance Cpl. Richard Slocum, 19, Saugus, Calif.; died Sunday in a vehicle accident near Abu Ghraib, Iraq; assigned to 1st Battalion, 3rd Marine Regiment, 3rd Marine Division, III Marine Expeditionary Force, Marine Corps Base, Hawaii.

Democracy, a tough course in new Iraq

Troops from FOB Hawk help out when town reaches debate impasse

BY WARD SANDERSON

Stars and Stripes

FORWARD OPERATING BASE HAWK, Iraq — The ones who stood out first were the mayor, the imam and the sheik. The women, though, soon took over.

The mayor wore a navy jacket, the imam and sheik fluttered in turbaned and draped. The women wore floral-hued scarves. The mayor, the imam, the sheik and some studded men all took seats around the long table. Most of the women sat along the walls near the children.

The 20 or so people were the council and notables of Iraqi Village, a settlement of squatters in the Abu Gharaib area, and last week they had grievances.

Maj. Patrick Barry, executive officer of the 33rd Armor Battalion of the Washington National Guard, would listen to them all for hours.

The villagers didn't really own the land upon which they squabbled — they just took it over after Saddam Hussein fell. Barry described it as Iraqi government property, but the new government allowed the squatters to form an unofficial town council for now.

The council would gather at the Forward Operating Base

Hawk when things got out of hand, and ask the Americans for help. Their enthusiasms for voting combined with verbal jousting, talk of real violence and want of a strong man showed a people in search of democracy, but wanting desperately to impose their will upon the other guy nonetheless.

During the course of the meeting, the mayor would prove defensive, the imam would maintain pious distance from this thing called democracy, the sheik would pine for the day when he was held in highest esteem. The women in scarves, initially demure, would vent.

The village mayor had seized the daycare and installed his wife as principal and had hired his daughter-in-law, too, some said. The mayor said she was the most qualified.

"We basically had to put out a playbook on all this to keep track of everyone."

National Guard

Another man said the council sent him a letter threatening to use him as a human shield. The women of the daycare complained that the mayor's son showed up to the school brandishing an AK-47.

"Well, OK," Barry started. "Did anyone send a threatening letter that we should know about?"

"Sending threatening letters is a big deal, and I want to find out what's going on."

WARD SANDERSON/Stars and Stripes

Residents and council members of Iraqi Village come to an impasse during a meeting with U.S. Army National Guard members last week. The residents voice their problems at meetings on Forward Operating Base Hawk so troops can help solve disputes.

Someone said the council did not send any such letter. "This is a note when someone is out of order, and goes outside the rules," an interpreter explained.

The man who was disciplined by the letter had somehow interfered in the brouhaha over the daycare and something to do with sports, and was told to mind his own business.

A woman in a lilac scarf fired off a staccato burst in Arabic. There is nothing to the letter, she insisted.

The square-jawed major listened, fingers locked in front of him on the table. Beside him sat his civil affairs officer, 1st Lt. Glenn Allen. Sgt. 1st Class Richard Allen studied things from the back of the room.

After much heat, everyone seemed willing to forget the letter. "So there's no problem," Barry said. "Let's move on."

Then it was on to the charge of nepotism. The women usurped by the mayor's wife said they ran the daycare just fine in the past, and not only that, they griped, the wife was something like 60 and too old to run a daycare. It was all just like the Ba'athists, they said.

The mayor said he could have installed his wife a long time ago if he was so devious, but he did not.

"Excuse me," a woman called out in English.

An apparent council member piped up, and Jimmy Samo, a civilian interpreter, translated: "We are run by people without education, without a degree, without being civilized."

Three men, apparently the mayor's supporters and including the man with the letter, stood up to leave. There was noise and shuffle. A woman accused the lot of flashing an AK-47 around at the school. The men eventually sat back down.

"Let me ask you this," Barry said. "Who is best qualified to run the daycare?"

One woman, apparently one of those fired, said she had experience with UNICEF. Then the staccato woman handed over signatures calling for a new election.

"He is running things like a dictator," she said of the mayor.

"There's apparently a split in the council," Barry said. "No council is perfect. But we have to come to a place where we aren't stifled by our disagreements." Soon it was a tsunami of gesturing hands backed by grimaces. They asked Barry to choose. He should hire and fire.

"If you're opposed to these five people," Barry said of the new daycare staff, "tell me what names you'd put there instead."

The mayor said his wife had a graduate degree in education. Why couldn't he hire her when she is wise and he the mayor?

"Someone's going to have to compromise," Barry replied.

The mayor told the major he wanted him around more often — why do they ever have council meetings without him?

The imam, who mostly sat gaunt and silent but whose presence felt like that of a stern recess monitor, spoke at last. The imam said something to the effect that he was a religious man and this business of politics was a dirty one. He had turned down a council seat himself. His law was the Koran.

"I appreciate your comments, and understand that religion is a lot less messy than politics," Barry told him. "You have the ability to walk above a lot of the mud."

The imam nodded and smiled.

Barry told the council the mayor should side with them most of the time, and should act alone only when he really believes in something.

This made the opponents angry. They brought up the mayor's son and the incident with the Kalashnikov.

One, two, three hours passed, and then more. The afternoon sun would drop in the sky toward evening. The rays would slant through the windows and onto the table, backlighting the dust on the glass and showing the film on the blond wood. Barry kept asking who should run the daycare. The lieutenant had to leave. The mayor would stay.

Democracy, it turns out, takes time and compromises, voting instead of shouting.

The dark-turbaned sheik, face round and bearded, said, faces were different before this chaos of voting for a mayor. Back then, he was in charge. He braved danger and dealt with outlaws and never complained. Why have the people abandoned him?

It was difficult for a foreigner to follow, an opera in another tongue. How did Barry do it?

Sgt. 1st Class Allen, still sitting in back, said it could be done if you treat it like football.

"We basically had to put out a playbook on all this to keep track of everyone."

Subway sandwich shop opens in Tikrit

A Subway sandwich shop has opened at Forward Operating Base Darger, the 1st Infantry Division headquarters at Saddam Hussein's former palace complex in Tikrit, according to a Task Force Darger news release.

The shop opened Monday following a short ribbon-cutting ceremony. Sgt. Edgar Huerta, a scout from the 1st Squadron, 4th Cavalry Regiment, placed the first order — a turkey breast sandwich, the release stated.

Subway operates shops at many overseas military bases, including several in Iraq. This is the second at a base in the sector controlled by the 1st ID-led Task Force Darger north of Baghdad, which includes Kirkuk, Baiji, Tikrit, Samarra, Balad and Baquba. The other is at Forward Operating Base Speicher, also in Tikrit.

New education center named for fallen tank GI

The 1st Infantry Division's 3rd Brigade Combat Team has opened a new education center at its headquarters in Baquba, Iraq, and dedicated it in memory of one of its fallen soldiers, according to a 1st ID news release.

The Kandor Education Center at Forward Operating Base Warhorse includes seven computer terminals for soldiers who are taking online college and correspondence courses. It is staffed by three career counselors from the brigade and serves between 20 and 50 soldiers per day, the release said.

The center is named for Spc. Martin Kondor, from Company A of the 1st Battalion, 63rd Armor Regiment, based in Vilseck, Germany. He volunteered for service in Iraq and was serving on the brigade commander's personal security detachment until he was killed April 29 by shrapnel from a roadside bomb.

Lifesaver training gets lift as medic units join forces

BY JULIANA GITTLER

Stars and Stripes

LSA ANACONDA, Iraq — Soldiers from across the base fulfilled a military medical requirement and learned the most realistic and relevant training possible through a combat lifesaver program launched this month.

Instead of just the basics, such as intravenous injections, splints and bandages, soldiers practiced loading an injured comrade into a Black Hawk and other skills.

When the unit responsible for medical education shifted its mission in August, members from all the medical units remaining — Army, Air Force, aviation and civilian — came together to take over, adding their respective expertise to maintain combat lifesaver education at Anaconda.

"They all have different experience and pitch in different resources," said Capt. Troy Sarria, who coordinates the new cooperative medical education group.

The Army requires one in 10 soldiers in every unit to have combat lifesaver certification to treat immediate life-threatening wounds, said Maj. Kristi Hilton, with the 13th Corps Support Command medical logistics section.

It's up to units to make sure their soldiers stay up on training. And since units can't travel to Kuwait before heading home without combat lifesavers in tow, the need is more urgent as Operation Iraqi Freedom II comes to a close.

Units had "to make sure all that training has been done prior to them leaving," said Maj. Valerie Smith, operations officer for the 118th Area Support Medical Battalion.

About 200 soldiers needed to be recertified and 150 certified in the next few months, Hilton said.

"Everybody had a piece of the pie, that kept one unit from having to do it all," Hilton said. "We were able to make the classes a little bigger."

The course includes the atter-specific sections not part of a normal combat lifesaver class including field sanitation, combat stress and loading a helicopter for an air evacuation.

When the topic is combat lifesaving and the students are in Iraq, teachers discovered an eager group of pupils.

"Instructors find they definitely paid attention more to what they would back in the States," Sarria said.

The new group will offer combat lifesaver training and training, as well as certification for medics.

Ten groups from the Army, Air Force and the contracting firm KBR are participating, including the 82nd Medical Company (Air Ambulance), the 785th Combat Stress Unit and the 28th Medical Logistics, for supplies, Hilton said.

Many of the units include reservists and National Guardsmen who have medical backgrounds in their civilian lives and add different support, said Lt. Col. Robert Cody, 118th Medical Battalion commander.

While some units have medics who could recertify their own soldiers, the partnership eases the burden on those that don't.

The partnership has also brought the medical units together to collaborate on base-wide medical planning, which didn't really exist before.

"Information sharing is now much better," Smith said.

Officer: Order was given to secure arms

101st Airborne GIs stopped at Al-Qaqa on way to Baghdad

BY KIMBERLY HEFLING

The Associated Press

EVANSVILLE, Ind. — A U.S. military unit that reached a munitions storage installation after the invasion of Iraq had no orders to search or secure the site, where officials say nearly 400 tons of explosives have vanished.

When troops from the 101st Airborne Division's 2nd Brigade arrived at the Al-Qaqa installation south of Baghdad a day or so after other coalition troops seized the capital on April 9, 2003, there were already looters throughout the facility, Lt. Col. Fred Wellman, deputy public affairs officer for the unit, told The Associated Press.

The soldiers "secured the area they were in and looked in a limited amount of bunkers to ensure chemical weapons were not present in their area," Wellman wrote in an e-mail to the AP.

"Bombs were found but not chemical weapons in that immediate area. Orders were not given from higher to search or to secure the facility or to search for HE type munitions, as they (high-explosive weapons) were everywhere in Iraq," he wrote.

The 101st Airborne was at least the second military unit to arrive at Al-Qaqa after the U.S.-led invasion began. Pentagon spokesman Bryan Whitman told The Washington Post that the 3rd Infantry Division reached the site around April 3, fought with Iraqi forces and occupied the site. It left after two days for Baghdad, the Post reported Wednesday.

AP correspondent Chris Tomlinson, who was embedded with the 3rd Infantry but didn't go to Al-Qaqa, described the search of Iraqi military facilities south of Baghdad as brief, cursory missions to seek out hostile troops, not to inventory or secure weapons.

The enormous size of the bases, the rapid pace of the advance on Baghdad and a limited number of troops made it impossible for U.S. commanders to allocate any soldiers to guard any of the facilities after making a check, Tomlinson said.

The disappearance of the explosives was first reported in Monday's New York Times and has subsequently become a heated issue in the U.S. presidential campaign.

Sen. John Kerry's campaign called the disappearance the latest in a "tragic series of blunders" in Iraq by President Bush's administration.

Vice President Dick Cheney raised the possibility the explosives disappeared before U.S. soldiers could secure the site, and he complained that Kerry does not mention the "400,000 tons of weapons and explosives that our troops have captured."

Two weeks ago, Iraqi officials told the International Atomic Energy Agency that the explosives vanished from the Al-Qaqa installation as a result of "theft and looting... due to lack of security." The ministry's letter said the explosives were stolen sometime after coalition forces took control of Baghdad.

The disappearance, which the IAEA reported to the U.N. Security Council on Monday, has raised questions about why the United States didn't do more to secure the facility and failed to allow full international inspections to resume after the invasion.

Russia, citing the disappearance, called on the Security Council to discuss the return of U.N. weapons inspectors to Iraq. But the United States said American inspectors were investigating the loss and that there was no need for U.N. experts to return.

Russian U.N. Ambassador Andrei Denisov insisted that raising the issue in the council was "practical," not political, saying the explosives posed a danger.

The explosives at Al-Qaqa had been housed in storage bunkers at the facility. U.N. nuclear inspectors placed fresh seals over the bunker doors in January 2003. The inspectors visited Al-Qaqa for the last time on March 15, 2003, and reported that the seals were not broken therefore, the weapons were still there at the time.

The team then pulled out of the country in advance of the invasion.

The Al-Qaqa munitions included HMX and RDX, key components in plastic explosives, which insurgents in Iraq have used in bomb attacks. But HMX is also a "dual use" substance powerful enough to ignite the fissile material in an atomic bomb and set off a nuclear chain reaction.

NBC correspondent Lai Ling Jew, who was with the 101st, told MSNBC that "there wasn't a search" of Al-Qaqa.

"The mission that the brigade had was to get to Baghdad," she said. "As far as we could tell, there was no move to secure the weapons, nothing to keep looters away."

Wellman, the 101st Airborne spokesman, said he does not know if any troops were left at the facility once combat troops from the 2nd Brigade left.

Lt. Gen. William Boykin, the Pentagon's deputy undersecretary of defense for intelligence, said that on May 27, 2003, a U.S. military team specifically looking for weapons went to the site but did not find anything with IAEA stickers on it.

The Pentagon would not say whether it had informed the IAEA that the conventional explosives were not where they were supposed to be.

The IAEA had pulled out of Iraq in 1998, and by the time it returned in 2002, it confirmed that 35 tons of HMX that had been placed under IAEA seal were missing.

IAEA chief Mohamed ElBaradei told the United Nations in February 2003 that Iraq had declared that "HMX previously under IAEA seal had been transferred for use in the production of industrial explosives, primarily to cement plants as a booster for explosives used in quarrying."

"However, given the nature of the use of high explosives, it may well be that the IAEA will be unable to reach a final conclusion on the end use of this material," ElBaradei warned at the time.

He did not specifically mention Al-Qaqa in his February 2003 briefing to the United Nations, and the agency has not said whether it separately informed the United States.

Al-Zarqawi's group claims attacks in Baqouba

BAQOUBA, Iraq — A militant group has claimed responsibility for two bomb attacks against police in the central town of Baqouba in a statement posted Wednesday on a Web site. The claim came from Jordanian militant Abu Musab al-Zarqawi's group, Al-Qaida in Iraq, formerly named Tawhid and Jihad. It was impossible to verify the claim's authenticity.

The group said its Qaqa Brigade attacked one patrol with a bomb that destroyed one police car and killed its passengers. After reinforcements arrived to evacuate the area, another bomb was thrown off targeting the policemen. The statement did not claim a specific casualty toll.

On Tuesday, a roadside bomb attack left one policeman dead and 10 others injured, according to Col. Sabr Salai. Baqouba is an insurgent hotspot 35 miles northeast of Baghdad.

Al-Qaqa is the name of a munitions depot south of Baghdad where nearly 400 tons of conventional explosives have gone missing, the International Atomic Energy Agency said this week.

Mannheim memorial reminds brigade what was lost, gained in Iraq

BY JON R. ANDERSON
Stars and Stripes

MANHEIM, Germany — Lt. Col. John Garrity remembers well the day Staff Sgt. Bobby Brinkman died.

When Garrity, commander of the 709th Military Police Battalion, arrived at the scene of the ambush on Oct. 20, 2003, a small surgical team already was working furiously to save the doomed soldier where he fell to an insurgent's roadside bomb on the dirty streets of Baghdad.

Within minutes, another ambush was unleashed wounding an entire squad of Garrity's MPs on the other side of town. "It was a nightmare day," said Garrity. It was the day of day soldiers pray they never see, but refuse to forget.

Not that he needs the help, but Garrity — along with his command sergeant major — carries a ring of dog tags from all seven of the soldiers they've lost during the war in Iraq, each one representing a day — and a life — Garrity knows he will remember well to his own last breath.

On Wednesday, the Germany-based 18th Military Police Brigade unveiled a memorial honoring those who made the ultimate sacrifice in Iraq. The brigade has had troops deployed to Iraq continuously since the war began.

On a humble, granite pillar — black with streaks of crimson rust — the names of all 13 soldiers who died during the first year of occupation in Iraq are inscribed under the twin battle axes of the brigade's patch.

"Many of us grew up occasionally visiting monuments in our own country emblazoned with the names of heroes we never knew. Now we understand," the brigade commander, Col. James Brown, told the gathering of troops assembled to quietly dedicate the memorial.

"The names on this monument represent soldiers we knew, loved and missed. Their loss stabs our hearts and steels our resolve to reap the harvest that they have planted through their service and sacrifice."

Flanking the memorial, 13 plants will grow in a broken circle, representing the lives cut short.

"It's never easy," said Spc. Wayne Olson, who was fresh out of his Riverside, Calif.,

"Their loss stabs out our hearts and steels our resolve to reap the harvest that they have planted through their service and sacrifice."

high school when he deployed to Iraq with the brigade, seeing more death than many do in an entire lifetime, "but I try to remember their accomplishments, rather than their passing away."

While small, the new memorial will help others remember those accomplishments with a price, said Olson.

"It's something that's really needed," added Sgt. 1st Class David Gilchrist, a platoon sergeant in the brigade.

When Spc. Rachel Bosveld died on Oct. 26 from an insurgent's mortar round, "it was my hardest day in Iraq. I have three daughters of my own and while I don't know what it's like to lose one of your own kids, on that day I think I came as close as you possibly can."

It is a day, he said, that he will remember well. And one that, he hopes, others will remember.

"I think it's important for the soldiers who come after to remember those who have come before and paid the ultimate sacrifice. With this memorial, I know that Bosveld will not be forgotten."

Reinstatement of draft not likely with barriers

JOHN E. MULLIGAN
The Providence Journal

WASHINGTON — "Vote or die" declared the T-shirts on young entertainers who mounted a concert stage this month at New York's Columbia University to rally antiviral sentiment against President Bush by raising the specter of involuntary service to the military.

Such scenes have played on campuses around the country this election year as rumors of a revived military draft have proliferated on the Internet, stoked in some cases by independently financed groups that back Sen. John Kerry's campaign for president.

The Democratic candidate himself has fueled the talk, stating recently that Bush's re-election would create "the great potential of a draft." A few key legislators — notably Sen. Chuck Hagel, R-Neb., an Army veteran of Vietnam — have said, without fully endorsing a draft, that it might have to be considered under certain circumstances.

But the barriers — practical, political and legal — to reinstatement of the draft are so large that many experts in both parties consider the prospects remote.

To start with, the commander in chief cannot revive the draft without an act of Congress.

Bush has emphatically ruled out a draft. Kerry is likewise opposed.

A Democratic bill to restore the draft failed in the House on Oct. 5 by a vote of 402-2. Support for the draft in the Senate is scarce as well.

The Pentagon is so committed to the volunteer force that a move toward the draft would trigger "mutiny from Army leadership," remarked military analyst Pat Towell of the nonpartisan Center for Strategic and Budget Assessment.

"There is not going to be a draft, no matter who is elected president, unless there is a protracted, multiyear war with China" or some other great crisis, said Ralph Peters, a military author and analyst based in Virginia.

"You raise a draft if you need a million more troops, not if you need 20 or 30,000 more," said Peters.

The charge that Bush would institute a draft relies on some trends — principally the stress that the Iraq war has put on the Army — that do have a basis in fact.

"There is stress. It's a war," said Peters, a retired Army officer.

IN THE STATES

Bush, Kerry campaign hard in last stretch

The Associated Press

SILOU CITY, Iowa — Sen. John Kerry said President Bush on Wednesday of “dodging and bobbing and weaving” on explanations for nearly 400 tons of missing explosives in Iraq. Bush said his presidential challenger was making wild charges without knowing the facts.

Less than a week before the election, both campaigns intensified their efforts — in speeches, in TV ads, in telephone appeals and in courtrooms across the nation. With their agendas laid out all summer and fall, Bush and Kerry were trying to create an aura of excitement in get-out-the-vote rallies, hoping to snag the dwindling pool of voters who haven't taken sides.

Kerry hit hard at this week's revelation that explosives had disappeared from an outpost in Iraq.

“The missing explosives could very likely be in the hands of terrorists and insurgents, who are actually attacking our forces on 80 times a day on average,” Kerry said at a rally in Sioux City.

“But now today we've learned even more. What we're seeing is a White House that is dodging and bobbing and weaving in their usual efforts to avoid responsibility, just as they've done every step of the way in our involvement in Iraq.”

Kerry said Vice President Dick Cheney “is becoming the chief minister of disinformation” while the president remains silent on the matter.

Bush did bring up the matter a few minutes later in a speech in Lima, Pa.

“Now the senator is making wild charges about missing explosives when his top foreign policy adviser admits, quote, ‘We do not know the facts.’”

“Think about that — the senator's denigrating the action of our troops and commanders in the field without knowing the facts. Unfortunately, that's part of a pattern of saying almost anything to get elected.”

Kerry says opponent dodging key issue; president says Kerry's charges ‘wild’

Bush was referring to remarks made by Kerry adviser Richard Holbrooke on Tuesday in an interview with Fox News. Holbrooke said, “The U.N. inspectors had told the American military this was a major depot.” He added: “I don't know what happened. I do know one thing — in most administrations, the buck stops in the Oval Office.”

Kerry also appealed to middle class voters in the election he won Wednesday, saying Bush had sold them out to help the wealthy and now wanted “four more years of what he can keep up the bad work.”

Kerry, meanwhile, put together a campaign endgame that included persistent appeals to win over previously Democratic voters and a rarely used weapon in this bruising campaign — a positive commercial.

Rockers Bruce Springsteen and Jon Bon Jovi were rejoining the Kerry campaign, minstrels in his fast-moving gallery. California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger was bringing his star power — and moderate GOP reputation — to Bush's side later in the week.

The president turned to the iconoclastic Democratic Sen. Zell Miller of Georgia to accompany him Wednesday to Pennsylvania and Ohio events, in keeping with his late-breaking appeals to Democrats who aren't sold on their own party's nominee.

Bush, in Pennsylvania, said, “I want to remind the American people that if Senator Kerry had his way — Saddam Hussein would still be in power, he would control all those weapons and explosives” and could have shared them with America's terrorist enemies.

“For a political candidate to jump to conclusions without knowing the facts is not a person you want as your commander in chief,” Bush said.

Kerry was focusing on economic troubles in the Sioux City speech Wednesday before stumping in Minnesota and back in Iowa, at a Cedar Rapids event. Aides said that speech and one Friday that will blend his campaign's economic and foreign policy proposals as his “closing arguments” for change. The speeches were added to his schedule after aides had said earlier that a speech Tuesday on homeland security was to be his last of the campaign.

After ripping Kerry for weeks as an equivocator, Bush planned to close the contest with a 60-second commercial meant to show him as steady, trustworthy and compassionate in dangerous times.

The ad shows an emotional president telling the Republican National Convention about meeting the children and parents of slain U.S. soldiers, as well as wounded servicemen and women.

“These four years have brought moments I could not foresee and will not forget,” Bush says. “I've learned firsthand that ordering Americans into battle is the hardest decision, even when it is right.” The commercial will be seen by a limited audience, given that it will run only on a couple national cable news networks.

Still, neither campaign was going up, beat, nor were their supporters.

Hard-hitting leaflets lined mailboxes in a dozen or so hotly contested states. A glossy mailing by the Pennsylvania Democratic State Committee showed burning roadside wreckage in Iraq, with U.S. soldiers looking on, and the headline “Wrong Choices ... Less Security.”

A Republican National Committee mailing showed pictures of Jane Fonda and Michael Moore, two anti-war liberals supporting Kerry, and the headline, “John Kerry's heart and soul of America?”

Kerry's latest ad accuses the Bush administration of failing to secure the explosives that disappeared from a military installation south of Baghdad around the time U.S. forces were toppling Saddam Hussein's government.

New state polls suggested the race was deadlocked in Florida, Ohio and Pennsylvania, the three most important battlegrounds. With the possibility of another inconclusive election night looming, lawyers were already deep in courtroom entanglements in a variety of states over problems either anticipated or already experienced in states with heavy early voting.

In one example, a federal judge in Miami ruled against Democrats in saying Florida election officials will not be required to process incomplete voter registration forms.

Families of slain troops harden political views

The Associated Press

SALEM, Ore. — Paintings of Sgt. Donald Walters in uniform adorn the walls of his mother's house. His Purple Heart, Silver Star and POW medals sit in a glass case. A banner with a single gold star — signifying the loss of a family member in a war — hangs above the window.

After her son's death, Arlene Walters became an outspoken critic of what she considered President Bush's poor planning for the war. But it's not enough to sway her vote.

“Don was willing to do this, he thought it had to be done, so I had to support him,” said Walters, 67, who voted for Bush in 2000 and plans to do so again. “I have to support it because he gave his life for it.”

As casualties continue to mount in Iraq, some who lost family members in the war have switched their political allegiance from President Bush to Democrat John Kerry. One former Bush supporter from Birmingham, Ala., has actively campaigned against the president at anti-war rallies since her son's death.

But many more — Republicans and Democrats alike — say the experience simply reinforced their views.

“I can't say how angry we are with the administration and how these kids have been used and abused and sacrificed for nothing,” said Annette Pritchard, an Oregon City Democrat who lost her nephew, Pfc. William Ramirez.

Lorraine and Michael Earley have attracted attention in Wilmington, Ohio, with their yard display that includes a photo of their dead son, Army Sgt. Steven D. Conover, and a sign that reads: “Flush the Johns on Nov. 2,” referring to Kerry and his running mate, John Edwards.

“Bush didn't kill my son,” said Lorraine Earley, 44, who voted for Bush in 2000. “My son made a choice.”

In interviews with The Associated Press, many who lost family members in Iraq said they disapprove of Bush's handling of the war, like more than half of likely voters in a recent AP poll. But several said they would vote for Bush nonetheless.

Others want to do what they can to keep more soldiers from dying — and they think that means electing Kerry.

Cassini takes closer look at Saturn's moon

Craft's closest flyby of Titan reveals puzzling surface changes

BY JOHN ANTCAZAK
The Associated Press

PASADENA, Calif. — The international Cassini spacecraft began unveiling Saturn's mysterious sidekick Titan with a stream of increasingly sharp pictures of the surface taken during a flyby within 745 miles of the hazy moon.

Distinct dark and bright surface areas were apparent in pictures arriving at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory late Tuesday.

Scientists were thrilled, but admitted they could only speculate about what they were seeing.

"What we're looking at is the surface of Titan and that's pretty cool because it's never been done before [at such resolution]," said imaging scientist Carolyn Porco. Cassini's previous Titan flyby was at a distance of some 200,000 miles.

Scientists hoped the pictures and instrument data would show whether the hazy hydrocarbon skies of Titan have been concealing oceans or lakes of methane and ethane, which theories say could rain out of its skies.

Mission officials also hoped instruments would reveal new details of its atmospheric density, which would be useful when Cassini launches the European Space Agency's Huygens probe for a descent to Titan's surface in January.

Pictures were to be followed by radar data, which can be processed to show highly detailed surface images resembling black-and-white photographs. Radar imaging findings were expected to be released Wednesday.

Initial fuzzy pictures were from thousands of miles away, but the images improved as Cassini hurtled closer and closer to Titan, the only moon in the solar system known to have an atmosphere.

Titan, however, seemed to be only more puzzling. Scientists peering at newly arrived images could not say, for example, whether there was liquid on the surface or whether some of the bright areas were methane clouds in the atmosphere.

Unlike many other bodies in the solar system, Titan did not show any initial evidence of clearly circular features that might be impact craters, such as those that can be easily seen on Earth's moon, Porco said.

"It could be that if there were impact structures they might have been buried in the material that is falling out of the atmosphere and coating the surface," she said.

This image taken on Tuesday from 745 miles away by the craft Cassini is one of the closest ever of Saturn's moon Titan.

Jay-Z

Report: Jay-Z negotiating to become new president of Island Def Jam

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Jay-Z is in final negotiations to become president of Universal Music Group's Island Def Jam label, a source familiar with the negotiations said Tuesday.

Discussions with the superstar rapper, whose real name is Shawn Carter, have been going on for weeks. Barring any last-minute snags, a deal should be finalized within 10 days, according to the source, who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Since his first album in 1996, Jay-Z has achieved a string of radio hits, platinum albums and critical respect. After cranking out an album every year, Jay-Z released "The Black Album" in 2003 and declared he was retiring from recording. He still remains a major concert draw and is currently touring with R&B superstar K. Kelly.

Although many artists eventually become executives, it's a rare move for one with Jay-Z's current fame. As Island Def Jam president, the 33-year-old New York native would report to chairman Antonio "L.A."

Reid, who joined the label in February.

Separately, Universal Music Group has also been in talks with Jay-Z and longtime business partners Damon Dash and Kareem "Biggs" Burke to buy their Roc-A-Fella Records label. But Universal's bid to hire Jay-Z is not contingent on acquiring Roc-A-Fella, the source said.

NTSB says pilot caused 2001 crash of Flight 587

BY LESLIE MILLER
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The National Transportation Safety Board ruled that a pilot's mistake caused the crash of American Airlines Flight 587 on Nov. 12, 2001, doesn't settle the controversy over who was to blame for the crash.

The Airbus A300-600 plunged into a New York City neighborhood after losing its tail, killing all 260 people aboard and five on the ground.

The safety board ruled that the co-pilot improperly moved the rudder back and forth to try to steady the plane, which put more pressure on the tail than it could bear. The NTSB also ruled that the plane's overly sensitive rudder controls contributed to the accident, as well as the airline's inadequate pilot training.

The decision prompted angry reaction from Airbus Industrie, which manufactured the plane, and American Airlines, which trained the co-pilot. Each said the other shouldered more blame.

Both companies are being sued by families of the victims. The NTSB's reports can't be admitted into legal proceedings, but those familiar with air crash litigation say that lawyers use them as guides to develop their cases.

The safety board recommended that the Federal Aviation Administration set new standards to make sure pilots can handle planes safely when the aircraft veer to the side. The FAA should also study whether the A300-600 can be redesigned to limit the danger of overusing the rudder, the board said. That recommendation also applied to the Airbus A310, which U.S. passenger airlines do not use.

Airbus spokesman Clay McConnell said the company will work with the FAA to study whether it's possible to redesign the rudder control system.

The NTSB also recommended that the FAA standardize and upgrade the way pilots are trained to recover from aircraft upsets.

NTSB Vice Chairman Mark Rosenker, who successfully urged the board to place the Airbus' rudder design ahead of American's training as a probable cause, said the Airbus A300-600 is an "extremely safe" aircraft.

Board member Debbie Hersman said other American pilots received the same training without making the same mistake that co-pilot Sten Molin did on Flight 587.

The crash occurred just after the jet bound for the Dominican Republic took off from John F. Kennedy International Airport. The plane ran into turbulence caused by a Boeing 747 that had taken off just ahead.

American is the only U.S. commercial passenger airline that uses an A300-600 with 34 seats. FedEx and UPS also use that model aircraft. Airbus claimed the airline failed to train its pilots properly to fly the jet, while American Airlines accused Airbus of failing to disclose problems with the rudder system.

The NTSB was divided 3-2 on which factor was the larger contributor to the accident.

Sniper avoids death sentence

BY MATTHEW BARAKAT
The Associated Press

SPOTSVYLVANIA, Va. — Teenage sniper Lee Boyd Malvo avoided the death penalty and was sentenced to life in prison without parole under a plea deal for one of 10 slayings that terrorized the Washington area in October 2002.

Malvo, 19, could still face a death penalty prosecution for other slayings. He was sentenced Tuesday for the Oct. 11, 2002, killing of businessman Kenneth Bridges. He also received a life sentence for the shooting of Caroline Seavell on Oct. 4, 2002. She recovered from her wounds.

Malvo already is serving a life sentence for another one of the killings, and dropped his appeals of that conviction in connection with Tuesday's plea bargain.

Malvo's guilty plea took the form of an Alford plea, in which Malvo did not admit factual guilt but acknowledged the government has sufficient evidence to convict him. He cannot appeal the sentence.

Malvo declined to make a statement before he was sentenced.

Spotsylvania Commonwealth's Attorney William Neely said the victims' families supported the plea bargain.

"He's spending the rest of his life in a maximum security prison where he'll be locked down 23 hours a day, seven days a week for the rest of his life," Neely said.

Malvo was convicted last year and sentenced to life in prison for the Oct. 14, 2002, murder of FBI analyst Linda Franklin, one of the sniper killings over a three-week span in Maryland, Virginia and Washington, D.C.

His accomplice, John Allen Muhammad, is on Virginia's death row for one of the slayings.

Neely said after Tuesday's hearing that Malvo appeared to be heavily influenced by Muhammad. When Malvo was tried last year, his lawyers put on an insanity defense, claiming Muhammad had brainwashed Malvo into a killing machine.

Malvo could face the death penalty in Prince William County, as well as in Alabama and Louisiana, where he and Muhammad are charged with other murders.

Prince William County Commonwealth's Attorney Paul Ebert, who obtained a death sentence for Muhammad, has said he will pursue the death penalty against Malvo if the Supreme Court rules this fall that the execution of 16- and 17-year-olds is constitutional.

Defense lawyer Craig Cooley said Malvo "accepts responsibility to the extent that he is serving life in prison without parole."

Paula Bauer gazed at flood damage to her bedroom Tuesday in San Francisco. Bauer awoke to the sound of running water, "like from a creek," and realized her bed was floating in her bedroom. California's second powerful storm of the season swept across much of the state Tuesday, flooding homes, cutting power, and bringing heavy snow in the Sierra Nevada.

SAN FRANCISCO — A powerful Alaskan storm descended on California, flooding homes, cutting power to thousands and dumping record-setting snow in the Sierra Nevada.

A weather station in the central Sierra run by the University of California-Berkeley reported Tuesday that 48 inches of snow had fallen there this month, the most for October since record-keeping began at the site in 1945. The previous record was 36 inches in October 2000.

Many Sierra ski resorts were reporting their earliest openings in years.

"It's snowing like a son of a gun," said Norm Sayler, owner of Donner Ski Ranch at 7,200-foot Donner Summit.

A surprise storm last week already had dumped up to 3 feet of snow.

The storm was expected to linger several inches of rain across the state and 2 feet of snow — or more — in the mountains. The weather service was calling for intense rain in Southern California, prompting flash flood warnings and fears of mudslides in mountain areas scarred by wildfires over the past year.

Winds up to 65 mph were forecast for parts of Southern California, with areas above 5,000 feet expected to receive up to 5 inches of rain and snow.

A man was rescued after being swept up in the current of the rain-swollen San Gabriel River, said Inspector John Mancha of the Los Angeles County Fire Department.

Two streets in the San Bernardino Mountains, about 60 miles east of Los Angeles, were under voluntary evacuation orders due to unstable soil and the possibility of flash floods. Rising water also flooded a mobile home park in the Santa Clarita area of Los Angeles County.

In San Francisco, rain overwhelmed the city's storm drains early Tuesday.

"I turned the light on and could see water flooding from the walk-in closet in the bedroom door," said homeowner Paula Bauer.

The storm also flooded freeways throughout the San Francisco Bay area and contributed to a clogged morning commute that included a toppled big rig on Interstate 880 in San Leandro.

Power was cut to about 13,600 Pacific Gas & Electric Co. customers. Power was restored to all but 2,800 customers by late Tuesday afternoon, PG&E spokesman Paul Moreno said.

Pleas don't stop Texas execution

HUNTSVILLE, Texas — A man convicted in a 1992 murder case in which the troubled Houston police crime lab allegedly mishandled evidence was executed Tuesday evening despite last-minute legal battles and pleas from relatives of the murder victim that his life be spared.

U.S. District Judge Nancy Atlas had blocked Dominique Green's execution after his attorneys argued that boxes of improperly stored and catalogued evidence, kept by the crime lab and recently discovered, could contain information relevant to the case.

The state attorney general's office objected to the reprieve, which was then lifted by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Md. black bear hunt ends

OAKLAND, Md. — State wildlife managers declared Maryland's first black bear hunt in 51 years a success Tuesday even though they stopped it shortly of their 30-hour objective.

Twenty bears were killed in the one-day hunt, the Department of Natural Resources said. It had been scheduled for six days, but DNR officials halted the hunt Monday night to avoid possibly exceeding the quota.

Officials said 381 people participated in the hunt in the region where most of the state's estimated 500 black bears live.

FACES

Lohan hospitalized with high fever

"Mean Girls" star Lindsay Lohan was recovering at a hospital after being admitted with a high fever and headache, her publicist said.

Lohan, 18, has been in Los Angeles filming the upcoming movie "Herbie: Fully Loaded." She was hospitalized Thursday with a 103-degree fever, publicist Leslie Sloane Zelnik said.

"She's resting and getting better," Zelnik said Tuesday. The illness forced Lohan to postpone taping a cameo role on "That '70s Show," the sitcom that features her boyfriend, Wilmer Valderrama.

Production on "Herbie" also was halted and will resume after Lohan has recovered, Zelnik said.

Kidman's new movie catching flak

In the new film "Birth," Nicole Kidman stars as a woman who believes her dead husband is inhabiting a 10-year-old boy's body.

At first Kidman's character dismisses the boy's claims, but his intensity and conviction begin to sway her, and she starts to fall in love with him.

Though the moment is chaste, a scene in which Kidman and the boy (played by Cameron Bright) share a bathtub caused a hubbub and drew boos when "Birth" was screened at the Venice Film Festival.

"I see this as a beautiful film about love; I do not see it as something that is exploitive or distasteful," the 37-year-old actress told AP. Television News in an interview Monday. "I would never want to make something like that; it's just not my thing."

Tony Bennett unveils sculpture

Tony Bennett unveiled his heart — a 5-foot heart-shaped sculpture on which he painted an image of the Golden Gate Bridge — at Union Square in San Francisco before crowning his famous song to a crowd.

Bennett made the appearance Monday as part of the Hearts in San Francisco project, a collection of 130 decorated heart sculptures that have been displayed on city streets and public spaces since Valentine's Day.

After unveiling his heart, which will be on permanent display at Union Square, Bennett joined the crowd in singing his signature tune, "I Left My Heart in San Francisco."

'Law and Order' viewers 'save' character

"Law & Order: Criminal Intent" viewers gave the villainous character Nicole Wallace, played by Olivia D'Abo, a stay of execution Sunday.

During the Oct. 17 episode of the NBC drama series, audiences on the East Coast witnessed the bad gal's escape from police Detectives Robert Goren (Vincent D'Onofrio) and Alexandra Eames (Kathryn Erbe), while West Coast viewers saw Wallace dead. Visitors to the network's Web site could then see both endings and vote whether the character would live or die.

On Sunday's episode, it was revealed that Wallace didn't bite the dust. According to the Web site, there were 62,074 votes for her to live while 54,224 wanted to see the character dead.

Catherine Zeta-Jones suing topless club

Catherine Zeta-Jones should be flattered that her image was used for advertising and promotion on the Web site of a Nevada topless club, a spokesman for the club said.

Jones is suing The Spice House, which bills itself as "Reno's friendliest topless cabaret," and its owner, Weslow Resources, for displaying her picture on "numerous pages" of its Web site without her permission, according to a lawsuit filed last week in U.S. District Court in Los Angeles.

Sometimes her image was shown alongside partially nude women, and created the false impression the actress "endorsed or approved of the sexually explicit content" and could "dilute the value of her celebrity endorsement," the lawsuit says.

Who won a best-supporting actress Oscar for 2002's "Chicago," seeks unspecified damages and an order barring further use of her likeness.

DEALING WITH 'MEN'

Sheen supports new television series but tires of playboy role

BY TERRY MORROW

Scripps Howard News Service

Charlie Sheen gets straight to the point.

"I have to go to the bathroom," he says, shortly before his interview discussing his hit series "Two and a Half Men" (airing 9:30 p.m. Mondays, CBS) begins.

But he soon gets on a roll about talking about the sitcom that is clearly his pride and joy, and ignores nature's call.

He's proud of the show and defends it. He is also frank with his criticisms of it.

Ask him if he likes playing the perennial playboy on TV, and he'll honestly answer, well, not really.

"It's kind of juvenile," he says. "I think I am higher evolved than this guy. I'm tired of lying. That's how I really feel."

"I'm tired of saying, 'Oh, it's great to play [a playboy] and then I get to go home to my wife.' That [bull]. It's juvenile. At some point, you've got to grow up."

On "Men," Sheen plays a version of his well-publicized '90s image — a thoughtless playboy. But on "Men," this Charlie is only kept grounded because his more responsible brother and his nephew live with him.

In real life, Sheen is happily married to actress Denise Richards, and they have a baby.

But he admits that for the show to work, it has to maintain some of what the audience expects.

"We're going to stay in our own kind of world," he says. "We're going to tell the stories that gave us a following."

"The second season is important in that people shouldn't tune back into a show and not recognize it. You should stay true to what you delivered the first time."

And sometimes, he says, the world of "Men" can spin off course.

"It works when we stay true to our elements," he says. "It doesn't work when we invite people in and we do things that don't support or celebrate our world."

"It happened a couple of times last season, but if I point out which episodes then the people working on it will read this, and, well, you know. It won't be good, and I'll get a phone call."

Sheen is all for guest stars. He had Elvis Costello and Sean Penn in the season opener. He has Martin Sheen, his dad, and his wife around this season, too.

As for having Dad around, "it will be interesting," he admits.

"He loves the show, and he'd tell me if he didn't. He wants to do this show."

SHWS

Charlie Sheen stars as playboy Charlie Harper on the series "Two and a Half Men."

He's always been one of my biggest supporters in a lot of different ways, and he's pretty tactful when he has an opinion about my career."

And his wife? "Denise was the one who read this script and said, 'You have to do this show.' I read it and loved it but was somewhat on the fence about it. She was the one who told me it was a good idea to do."

Sheen likes pointing out that the success of "Men" defied critical expectations. The show arrived as the top-rated new comedy of last season, and one of CBS's biggest overall hits.

That, however, did not translate into industry recognition or even major magazine covers. "Men," a regular Top 20 entry every week, is a quiet hit.

"We were working on the critical narrative last year that the half-hour comedy was dead," Sheen says. "So no one gave us ink after we came on and was successful, [or critical] would have to admit they were wrong."

Before he can finish his thought, he stops and thinks.

His roll has stopped. He has lost his thought, and he really must move on. "I had some other point to make," he says. "It was funny, and it had three layers to it. It would have made you laugh. But, now, I really have to go."

Sinclair's anti-Kerry broadcast blurs lines

BY CHRISTOPHER HANSON

Sinclair Broadcast Group's attempt to force an anti-John Kerry propaganda film onto prime time was the latest example of a disturbing trend: ideological programming that blurs the old distinction between news and opinion.

One of the central responsibilities of journalism is to separate fact from opinion in order to inoculate the voter against misleading propaganda, as media critic Walter Lippmann pointed out in the 1920s. But the trend toward ideological journalism does exactly the opposite, making it easier for falsehood to masquerade as fact and for voters to cast ballots based on false assumptions. Some conservatives dismiss complaints about Sinclair as the hypocritical whining of liberals who refuse to admit that other broadcast TV networks have a pro-Kerry agenda.

"It's hardly an abuse of public trust ... for Sinclair to present an alternative view of Mr. Kerry's much-ballyhooed days as an anti-war protester," the conservative Boston Herald declared in an Oct. 15 editorial. "The other side of the story has been told ad nauseam ... What half-tuned-in voter can't picture ... Lt. Kerry ... talking about the 'last man' dying for a mistake."

Nonsense. There is a huge difference between presenting multiple sides of a news story and purveying the absurd allegation that as a treasonous liar whose anti-war testimony in Congress in 1971 prolonged the torture of American POWs in North Vietnam.

That charge is preposterous on its face, yet Sinclair proposed airing it as a "news" segment.

One of the central responsibilities of journalism is to separate fact from opinion in order to inoculate the voter against misleading propaganda, as media critic Walter Lippmann pointed out in the 1920s. But the trend toward ideological journalism does exactly the opposite, making it easier for falsehood to masquerade as fact and for voters to cast ballots based on false assumptions. "The other side of the story has been told ad nauseam ... What half-tuned-in voter can't picture ... Lt. Kerry ... talking about the 'last man' dying for a mistake."

Nonsense. There is a huge difference between presenting multiple sides of a news story and purveying the absurd allegation that young antiwar activist Kerry single-handedly prolonged the Vietnam War and thus the torture of American POWs.

Not to mention that the three major networks' record this year is hardly pro-Kerry. NBC, CBS and ABC reported heavily on claims of the Swift Boat Veterans for Truth that Kerry did not deserve some of his medals and had been sent state-side because of an unintentionally self-inflicted wound. Only after the damage was done did the mainstream media follow up to report that these charges were groundless.

Every reporter has biases and makes mistakes. But that is a far cry from Sinclair's unbridled electioneering.

Consider Dan Rather, the conservatives' No. 1 whipping boy. He might well have displayed bias, recklessness and incompetence when he relied on forged documents in a recent report on Bush's Air National Guard absenteeism. But Rather apologized when he realized he had been duped. He is at least a reporter who wants to get the facts right, not a propagandist.

Sinclair, by contrast, only climbed down when the "Stolen Honor" flag began to hurt the network financially. Its stock was falling in value, shareholders were on the verge of revolt, and Wall Street analysts were predicting the company had undermined its hopes of buying even more stations.

Partisan, ideological media have fared well in talk radio and cable TV, where the audience is small and self-selected. But Sinclair is a broadcast network. Its audience is large, geographically and demographically, and many viewers reacted with disgust to the planned documentary, speaking sponsors.

Critics correctly blame sensationalism and other news media ills on commercial pressure. But here was a case in which market forces had a healthier effect. Let's just hope the folks who favor broadcast deregulation think long and hard before allowing Sinclair to buy more stations. Sixty-two propaganda mills is a more-than-adequate monument to this media company's lust for influence.

Bush critics don't let facts get in way of good story

George W. Bush is a religious fanatic, it's said. He isn't. The man has never admitted making mistakes, critics claim. That's false. He has been strident in his dealings with Democrats, it's alleged. No, the Democrats have been strident in their dealings with him.

Jay Ambrose

This president has his faults, but the critics have exaggerated them to the point that some in the country are reportedly seeing therapists for fear Bush will be re-elected.

I don't question that they should get help, if in fact there's a way of restoring people to common sense following a deluge of propagandistic twaddle. But their trepidations should not be confused with sober reactions to reality. Where Bush is bad, he is not so bad as alleged, and John Kerry is mostly worse, an opportunist whose own views are so slippery that just about the time you think you have a grip on one it has squirted out of sight and a new view is being dangled before your eyes.

The people who call Bush a religious nut, for instance, cannot cite any theory to verify the claim. My guess is that they are largely ignorant about what their similarly religious neighbors are like — thoroughly decent people who harbor no theocracy-imposing plans. The critics certainly weren't listening when Bush said in the third debate that it's not instructions he receives from God when he prays. It's strength and calm, which is not so worrisome a thing for a wartime president to have.

Careful listeners in that third debate also found Bush agreeing that he has likely made mistakes. What he refused to do — to the disappointment of his political enemies — was pull out a guillotine and put his neck where the blade would fall. He did not say he was wrong in his decision to invade Iraq or in other major decisions in the war on terror. Have I missed it, or has Kerry gone around saying he has messed up time on a variety of fundamentally important issues?

Bush is a divider, we are told, only he is not the one who has been incessantly on the attack. Visit the works of Sen. Ted Kennedy someday, or those of Al Gore even before we arrived at this election year, or of Tom Daschle, Senate leader of the Democrats.

What you will find with Kennedy and Gore is charged accusation. Daschle has been more political, but has gone far beyond anything that Bush or others in the White House have ever said in return.

I am not supposing Bush a saint. His spending — as exemplified in a farm bill and Medicare prescription-drug bill — is outlandish. Glance Kerry's way, however, and you see someone eager to dig his hands deeper in taxpayer pockets so that he can spend still more on largely wasteful programs. Bush's much-maligned "tax cuts for the wealthy" don't come close to bringing us down to the lesser proportion of income taxes the wealthy paid several decades back. The reductions have helped stimulate an economy that was in decline prior to his election and that now boasts an unemployment rate that compares favorably with what was obtained during most of the Clinton years.

I wish Bush were more articulate, that he had met with the press more during his first term, that he had more often come out to talk to the American people as an adult to fellow adults, that his administration had managed the war in Iraq better, that his attorney general had been less heavy-handed on occasion, that he had not caved on a campaign finance measure that lessened free political speech in this land.

Add all of that up, and throw in more, and you still get nowhere close to the demon he is portrayed by Democrats as being, and meanwhile you have left out a lot, such as his resoluteness in the face of what is likely this era's greatest challenge — terrorism — and his underreported effectiveness in getting a high percentage of his proposals through Congress. It's a better record, a Brookings scholar found, than compiled by any president since Lyndon Johnson.

To err is human, it is used to be said about another president, Harry Truman, whose popularity was sea-level low in his last term in part because of a disliked war in Korea. Years passed and he was re-evaluated, and guess what? — in retrospect, we can see that in many ways he was exceptional.

Bush will likewise recover from the worst being said about him. I suspect, whether he wins or loses on Nov. 2.

No tiger charges

FL WEST PALM BEACH — Prosecutors have decided not to charge a former Tarzan actor in the escape of a 600-pound tiger last July.

A state wildlife officer shot and killed the tiger July 13 after the big cat allegedly lunged at him following a 26-hour hunt for his capture.

Investigators had filed a probable cause affidavit charging Steve Sipek with allowing captive wildlife to escape and causing a threat to the public.

But prosecutors filed a court document saying they were unable to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that Sipek negligently allowed the tiger to escape, The Miami Herald reported.

The state also couldn't disprove Sipek's allegation that someone else let the tiger out of the compound, Palm Beach County Assistant State Attorney Paul Zacks wrote in the document.

Sipek, who played Tarzan in B-movies decades ago, lives with five other big cats in a compound about 10 miles west of West Palm Beach.

Subscribe to lotto

NH CONCORD — State residents soon won't have to go to the store to buy their lottery tickets. Starting Nov. 1, New Hampshire Powerball players will be able to buy subscriptions to the game. Lottery Director Rick Wilf says New Hampshire is the first state to offer the season tickets for Powerball. The subscriptions are available for 26, 52, or 104 drawings.

Question added to bar

WA RICHLAND — The state Bar Association governing body voted to add a question on American Indian law to the state bar exam. Washington is the second state, after New Mexico, to require lawyers to understand tribal law. The first bar exam with the new question will be given in the summer of 2007.

What's in a name?

TX LUBBOCK — GOP candidate Randy Neugebauer is getting the word out on how to pronounce his name. Apparently, though, the National Republican Congressional Committee hasn't listened.

Neugebauer has been airing ads that poke fun at people's struggle to pronounce his surname. The ads, set in an old-fashioned barber shop in a small Texas town, have several people bandying about how to say "Neugebauer." (The correct pronunciation is NAW'-gub-uh-ur).

By the end of the ad, people learn how to say it correctly.

But a recorded telephone message in calls to District 19 constituents last weekend by the NRCC repeatedly mispronounced the Lubbock candidate's name. The man's voice pronounced it (NOO'-gub-uh-ur).

Chris Paulitz, a spokesman for the NRCC, said the mispronunciation has been corrected. He declined to say how many calls with the mispronunciation were made and how much the ad buy cost.

"We never discuss our October strategy," Paulitz said.

Neugebauer, who has served in the House since June 2003, faces longtime U.S. Rep. Charlie Stenholm, D-Abilene, who has represented District 17 since 1979.

Burial cave investigated

HI HONOLULU — Federal and state investigators have examined a Big Island burial cave to determine if Hawaiian artifacts are missing and for sale on the black market.

Members of Native Hawaiian groups who are claimants to the cave and their private investigators were present when the Kupaia cave in the Big Island's Kohala area was opened on Friday.

Donald Wong, chief investigator for the attorney general's office, said he was not at liberty to say what was found. But he said investigators found what they expected.

The state and U.S. Department of Interior are conducting separate investigations into how valuable artifacts from the cave and from several other collections have allegedly shown up for sale on the antiques black market within the last year.

The federal government is the lead agency in the investigation, Wong said, but the state attorney general may become involved, depending on what is found.

The federal investigators initiated their probe last spring. The state followed after a picture of the unsealed cave appeared in the Honolulu Star-Bulletin in August. The Native Hawaiian group Hui Malama I Na Kupuna O Hawaii, which reburied items in the cave in November 2003, pushed the state to seal the entrance and investigate.

Not for sale

KY CHATTANOOGA — A man who gave up one of his kidneys in response to a commercial Web site solicitation said he would be willing to take a lie detector test to show he did not sell the organ, despite claims to the contrary.

In an Oct. 20 operation in Colorado, Bob Smitty, 32, gave a kidney to a man who had needed a transplant since 1999 due to kidney disease.

The recipient, Bob Hickey, met Smitty through MatchingDonors.com, a Web site created to match donors and recipients for a fee. Hickey paid the Web site $295 a month for three months to post his plea. Both men have said there was no payment for the kidney, which would be a violation of federal law. There are no laws against soliciting an organ.

Drive-through flu shots

AR MAGNOLIA — Hundreds of Medicare patients rolled down their windows and rolled up their sleeves to get a flu shot while sitting in their cars at a drive-through clinic.

Magnolia Hospital inoculated more than 370 people in about 90 minutes in the hospital parking lot, and traffic backed up as people showed up early for the limited number of shots.

The first patient arrived five hours before the temporary drive-through clinic opened. More than 100 shots were administered in the first half hour, when the supply ran out, a line of cars still stretched down the street.

"People have been nice, they've been patient, understanding and cooperative," said hospital administrator Kirk Reamey.

Getting tough on DUIs

WY CHEYENNE — The governor's Council on Impaired Driving is recommending tougher penalties for people who have children with them when they drink and drive. The 40-member council was established more than a year ago. It wants tougher penalties if an impaired driver 18 years or older drives with anyone under 16 as a passenger.

Some council members said they would rather see the mayor's bodyguards patrolling the streets. Cantwell said she needs the security because she has received threats.

Baby koala causes stir

SC COLUMBIA — It's about the size of a jellybean, but it is the biggest thing to happen at Riverbanks Zoo in quite some time. It is a baby koala.

"I don't think I can adequately describe how excited everyone here is about this," executive director Satch Krantz said.

Zoo veterinarian Dr. Keith Benson spied the healthy, hairless baby in the pouch of Lotie, one of two female koalas at Riverbanks, on Sept. 17. Before he could get back to his office, e-mails were going out around the world with the news.

Riverbanks' two females, Lotie and Killarney, are gifts from South Carolina's sister-state of Queensland in Australia. Japan's Hirakawa Zoo donated the new baby's father, Marai.

Newborn koalas are less than an inch long and weigh a fraction of an ounce. They spend their first months entirely in their mother's pouch, and don't fully leave the pouch until they are about 1½ years old.

Australia is the koala's only native home and the cute marsupials have become a national symbol. Exportation of the animals is strictly controlled. There are only about 75 in U.S. zoos.

Turpike talks off

PA HARRISBURG — Negotiations have broken off between the Pennsylvania Turnpike Commission and its 2,000 unionized workers. No new talks are scheduled. Commission spokesman Carl DeFebo says Teamsters representatives notified turnpike managers they could call a strike without notice. Turnpike officials say the commission could keep the 531-mile highway open if union workers walk off the job.

Judge extols capture

TX DALLAS — A judge threw a party complete with balloons, streamers and a cake to welcome a former fugitive back to her court — and sentence him to life in prison.

"You just made my day when I heard you had finally come home," Criminal Courts Judge Faith Johnson told Billy Wayne Williams, who had been convicted in absentia of aggravated assault after he disappeared a year ago. "We're so excited to see you, we're throwing a party for you."

Williams, 53, was accused of choking his girlfriend until she was unconscious. He failed to appear for his trial last November and was recently captured.

Before he was brought into the courtroom, Johnson directed staff members as they placed balloons and streamers around the courtroom. A colorful cake was decorated with his name.

"It seems like everyone wants to have a party, and it's fun for you people, but not for me," Williams told reporters as he was led away in handcuffs.

Calls to the judge's office and the State Bar Association were not immediately returned Tuesday.

Williams has a criminal record dating back to the 1980s, authorities said. During his year on the run, Williams used disguises, posed as an attorney and used aliases such as "Justin Burroughs" and "Bubba Lee Williams," authorities said.

DA's time is up

CO DENVER — Twelve district attorneys across the state will be out of a job after November because of term limits. Bob Grant, who has served three terms as Adams County DA, says the departures are bound to hurt the justice system. In January, the Colorado Supreme Court ruled district attorneys are subject to a 1994 constitutional amendment on term limits.

Curbing elderly abuse

OR BEAVERTON — Gov. Ted Kulongoski announced recommendations aimed at curbing abuse of the elderly. The recommendations are a response to the more than 10,000 cases of elder abuse tallied by the Department of Human Services in 2003. Health officials suspect thousands more go unreported each year.

The plan includes a registry of individuals who have committed crimes against vulnerable adults.

SmartTag, E-Z merging

VA RICHMOND — Virginia is merging its SmartTag automated toll system with the E-Z Pass system used in many other East Coast states. The two systems become compatible Wednesday, state transportation officials say. SmartTag and E-Z Pass give drivers with prepaid accounts transponders to attach to their cars so a toll can be automatically deducted without stopping.

IKEA to open new store

Pending approval, construction could start next spring in time for an opening in summer 2006, the company said.

Group sues over whales

AK ANCHORAGE — Conservationists have sued a federal agency for allegedly failing to protect North Pacific right whales, which were hunted nearly to extinction more than a century ago and remain among the world's most endangered animals.

The suit asks the court to order the National Marine Fisheries Service to protect a "critical" habitat for the North Pacific right whale, saying it is required to do so under the Endangered Species Act.

That habitat most likely would be in Alaska's Bering Sea, where an increasing number of whales have summered since 1996, said Brent Plater, a lawyer for the Center for Biological Diversity.

The animals received international protection in 1931 and have been listed as endangered since 1973. Experts believe there are probably fewer than 100 North Pacific right whales in U.S. waters. Plater said a critical habitat designation would not necessarily mean a halt to fishing.

Sharon holds ground after withdrawal vote

Some lawmakers still calling for pullout to be put to referendum of Israel citizens

BY RAMIT PLUSHNICK-MASTI

The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Ariel Sharon said he will stand firm against rebels in his Likud Party who threatened to resign after parliament approved his Gaza withdrawal plan.

Four Cabinet ministers, led by Sharon's top rival, Finance Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, said they would step down if the prime minister doesn't commit to a referendum on the Gaza plan.

The turmoil raised new doubts about his ability to go ahead with the planned withdrawal from the Gaza Strip and parts of the West Bank next summer, as pledged.

The resignations of senior Likud ministers could lead to elections in coming months and delay implementation of a withdrawal. Alternately, Sharon could try to reshuffle his coalition and bring in the moderate Labor Party.

Sharon said he would not be swayed by the threats.

"I will never give in to pressures and threats, and I won't accept any ultimatums," he told the Haaretz daily. "My position on the referendum is unchanged. I am opposed to it because it will lead to terrible tensions and a rift in the public."

Sharon suggested he would try to avoid early elections, telling the Yediot Ahronot daily that "I can promise you that I will have a coalition that will continue to run this country."

In Tuesday's historic vote, parliament for the first time approved the dismantling of Jewish settlements in lands Israel occupied in the 1967 Mideast war and which are claimed by the Palestinians for a state.

Sharon won by a comfortable margin, with 67 legislators in favor, 45 against and seven abstaining. However, nearly half the Likud legislators and two religious parties voted against him, underscoring Sharon's break with his former constituency.

After the vote, Sharon fired Uzi Landau, a Cabinet minister who voted against him.

Proponents of the referendum say a nationwide vote is needed to give the plan legitimacy, noting that Sharon rejected a similar proposal by his Labor Party opponent during the 2003 election campaign. Sharon announced the plan early this year, suddenly reversing decades of support for building up Jewish settlements.

"There is no real mandate for this plan," Landau said Wednesday.

The referendum initiative got a boost when the National Religious Party, a key part of Sharon's coalition, announced just before the vote that it will quit within two weeks unless the parliament vote is accompanied by a pledge to hold a such a vote.

Four Likud ministers — Netanyahu, Limor Livnat, Yisrael Katz and Danny Navet — voted for the plan and then immediately demanded Sharon accept the NRP ultimatum or they would resign from the government.

Sharon would probably win a referendum, with opinion polls showing well over half of Israelis support the withdrawal. But Sharon and his new supporters say there's no time — or need — to hold one.

"The Knesset is the representative of the people," said Raanan Gissin, a top adviser to Sharon, referring to Israel's parliament. "The Knesset reflected what the general public believes."

The government hopes to complete the withdrawal next year, and still must submit to several more parliamentary votes to implement various stages of the pullout.

Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon, center, pauses in the Knesset, Israel's parliament, after his government's proposed Gaza disengagement plan was approved in a vote in Jerusalem on Tuesday.

Iran refuses to suspend uranium enrichment

BY SUSANNA LOOF
The Associated Press

VIENNA, Austria — Iran again ruled out a total suspension of uranium enrichment Wednesday as a second round of talks with European negotiators ended without an agreement on incentives aimed at getting the Tehran regime to stop.

"Total suspension will not be accepted under any circumstances," said Sirus Naseri, a member of the Iranian delegation that met in Vienna with envoys from Britain, France and Germany.

But Naseri said Iran was still trying to work out a compromise with the Europeans, who have been working to persuade Iran to agree to suspend enrichment and avoid possible U.N. sanctions.

The European diplomats involved in Wednesday's talks declined to comment.

Britain, France and Germany have offered Iran a trade deal and peaceful nuclear technology — including a light-water research reactor — in return for assurances that the country will stop uranium enrichment, which can produce fuel for both nuclear energy and atomic weaponry.

Diplomats called the EU package a "last chance" offer to Iran ahead of a key Nov. 25 meeting of the International Atomic Energy Agency, which could result in Tehran's defiance being reported to the U.N. Security Council, which has the authority to impose punishing sanctions.

The Vienna-based IAEA was not directly involved in the offer, but agency chief Mohamed ElBaradei has said he welcomes any attempt to negotiate an end to the standoff. Envoys from the three European nations met privately with the Iranian delegation at the French mission to international organizations in Vienna.

Iran insists its nuclear activities are peaceful and geared solely toward generating electricity. The United States, pointing to Iran's vast oil reserves, contends it is running a covert nuclear weapons program.

Heightening the U.S. concerns, Iran has resumed testing, assembling and making centrifuges used to enrich uranium.

Iran repeatedly has refused to abandon uranium enrichment, a key demand of the international community. Although the European envoys who presented their offer to the Iranians in Vienna last week made it clear that they would not budge on the enrichment issue, Iran's top nuclear negotiator, Hasan Rowhani, suggested there was some flexibility in the talks.

Rowhani, told state television earlier this week his government might be willing to consider a temporary suspension of enrichment, but he cautioned: "No other country can stop us exploring technology which is the legal right of Iran."

Boy rescued four days after Japan quake, but mother dies

Yuta Minagawa, 2, center, is carried out of rubble by a rescuer in Nagaoka, Japan on Wednesday, after surviving four days buried in a landslide from the powerful quake in Japan over the weekend.

YOMIURI SHIMBUN, ATSUHI TAKETAZU/JAP

BY KOJI SASAHARA
The Associated Press

NAGAOKA, Japan — In a rescue shown on live TV, a 2-year-old boy was pulled to safety Wednesday after surviving for four days buried in a landslide from the powerful quake that ravaged northern Japan over the weekend.

Rescuers also pulled Yuta Minagawa's mother, Takako Minagawa, 39, from the wreckage, but doctors later announced she had died. A daughter, 3-year-old Mayu, was still buried and her condition was uncertain.

The family's white van was swept away in a wave of boulders and earth that pulverized the hillside road they were on when a 6.8-magnitude quake ripped across rural Niigata prefecture on Saturday, killing at least 31 people.

The van was spotted under the landslide on Tuesday. Firefighters heard Takako Minagawa's voice in response to their calls and dug through the rocks and rubble Wednesday.

Homeless people in evacuation centers threw themselves to the floor and screamed in horror as the tremor rumbled through the rural area of Niigata prefecture. A 4.2-magnitude aftershock hit about 25 minutes later. More than 100,000 people are in public shelters.

Five people were injured in the Wednesday morning quake, but it was unclear if any were in serious condition, and some buildings were damaged.

The train station in Nagaoka, the largest city in the quake zone, was badly shaken and in danger of collapse, said an official at East Japan Railway Co's Niigata office. Public broadcaster NHK also reported that water and gas lines had broken in the area.

Quiet weddings have a nice ring to them

Where legal, devices allow venues to jam cell phones

BY OLGA R. RODRIGUEZ

The Associated Press

MONTEREY, Mexico — It was the reporters who noticed first.

Unable to call their editors while covering the wedding of the rich and famous, they asked the priest why their cell phones never worked at Sacred Heart. His reply: Israeli counterintelligence.

In four Monterey churches, Israeli-made cell phone jammers the size of paperback books have been tucked unobtrusively among paintings of the Madonna and statues of the saints.

The jarring polychromatic din of ringing cell phones is increasingly being thwarted — from religious sanctuaries to India's parliament to Tokyo theaters and commuter trains — by devices originally developed to help security forces avert eavesdropping and thwart phone-triggered bombings.

The Indian parliament had jammers installed after politicians ignored requests to turn off their cell phones and legislative sessions were constantly interrupted.

In Italy, universities started using the blockers after discovering that cell phone-savvy teenagers were cheating on exams by sending text messages or taking pictures of tests.

The four Roman Catholic churches in this northern city began using the devices, from Tel Aviv-based Netline Communications Technologies Ltd., after an insurance salesman informed them as a personal favor for a priest.

"There are still many people who don't understand that being at Mass is sharing a moment with God," said the Rev. Juan Jose Martinez, a spokesman for archdiocese. "Sadly, we had no other choice but to use these little gadgets."

Purchased for about $2,000 each, they can be turned on by remote control and emit low-level radio frequencies that thwart cell phone signals within a 100-foot radius.

Users get a "no service" or "signal not available" message on their cell phones.

Although Mexico has no law against the devices, the private use of cell phone blockers is illegal in the United States and most Western countries.

But the tide is turning. Japan allows public places such as theaters and concert halls to install jammers, provided they obtain a government-issued license.

They can't hear you now

Churches, businesses, and security and police forces are increasingly purchasing cell phone jamming equipment. The devices keep cell phones from ringing.

Cell phone companies communicate with their phones by transmitting signals. These signals allow the phone to connect

The jammer interferes with the phone causing it to generate too many errors. The errors make the phone unable to receive communication from its company.

Jammer sends an inaudible signal over a short distance in the same bandwidth* as the cell phone companies

* About 894-860 mhz and 1,930-1,990 mhz for consumer companies in the United States, except Netline

NOTE: Jamming distance varies with manufacturer and cellular signal strength.

And this month, France's industry minister approved a decision to let cinemas, concert halls and theaters install them — as long as provisions are in place so emergency calls can still be made.

Canada had considered allowing blocking in similar situations.

But Industry Canada, which regulates the country's telecommunications, decided against it, saying the devices could infringe on personal freedom and affect public safety by crippling communication with law enforcement and security agencies.

Officials at Netline, which sold its first jammer in 1998, say they are selling thousands of jammers a year and have expanded their business throughout the world.

They're far from the only manufacturers. The devices are sold the world over, with dozens of suppliers selling them on the Internet.

Tokyo-based Meic Inc. sold thousands of its Wave Wall jammers before the government stepped in and regulated their use to venues with live performances. Commuters still buy mobile jammers to shut up chatty train passengers, even though their use is illegal.

In Scotland, businessman Ronnie McGuire, owner of Electron Electrical Engineering Services, imported Taiwan-made cell phone blockers and sold them to hotels, restaurants and bars until a local newspaper reported his activities, which were illegal in Britain.

McGuire has said he will still import the Taiwanese devices but sell them for export only to countries where they are allowed.

Loreen Hain, the director of marketing and sales for Netline, wouldn't say how many devices the company sells per year or what country buys the most.

In Mexico, the main clients have been banks looking to stop would-be robbers from communicating with their accomplices and the Mexican government, which is planning to use them at prisons, Hain said.

Sacred Heart officials acquired their blockers two years ago.

"Whoever there was a wedding, cell phones would ring every five minutes," said Bulmaro Carrazza, a parish clerk. "It was a real problem because there were times when even the groom would forget to turn his cell phone off."

For months, the devices went unnoticed until reporters covering the weddings began complaining that their cell phones never worked.

Since word of the jammers went public, priests from around Mexico have been calling to find out how to get them, said Carrazza.

At Sacred Heart, a device at the entrance to the church and another by the altar are turned on right before every Mass. Still, parish remind parishioners to turn off their phones before beginning the services, hoping good cell phone etiquette will eventually catch on.

Margarita Escobedo, a Catholic who goes to church at least twice a week and volunteers at the San Genaro church, says she would welcome the jammers in her parish, where cell phones are becoming a nuisance.

"Those who bring cell phones to church are not committed to God," Escobedo said. "It's very distracting to be praying and suddenly hear birds chirping or techno music."

Declaring bankruptcy is not an easy choice. But for individuals and businesses facing a dire situation, it can be a welcome option.

There are different types of bankruptcy. For instance, Chapter 7 bankruptcy is designed for individuals, while Chapter 11 deals with businesses. These books explain what bankruptcy means and what it can entail.

■ "Personal Bankruptcy Simplified," by Daniel Sitarz Nova — offers insights on canceling major debt, dealing with creditors and deciding if Chapter 7 is the right option.

■ "The Bankruptcy Kit, 3rd Edition," by David Venturi Deaborn — spotlights different types of bankruptcy and filing processes.

■ "How to File for Chapter 7 Bankruptcy," 11th ed., by Stephen Elias, Albin Renauer, Robin Leonard and Kathleen Michon — explains how to file, going to court and more.

■ "Bankruptcy Step By Step," by James John Jurinski — covers chapters 7, 11 and 13, starting the bankruptcy process and re-establishing credit.

Incontinence often not death with

Dear Abby: I am writing in response to the letter from "Can't Stand It in N.J.," whose boyfriend wets the bed every night. There are many misconceptions about incontinence.

Chances are he refuses to see a physician because he is embarrassed or may not understand the treatment options and resources available to him. Abby, he is not alone in this. An estimated 25 million Americans are plagued by incontinence problems.

Incontinence, if left undiagnosed and untreated, can be debilitating. It may cause the loss of independence, self-respect and healthy sexuality. But, despite these unfortunate consequences, the majority of people with incontinence — 66 percent — have never discussed the subject of urinary health with a doctor or nurse.

It's time to help people address this "taboo" subject.

The National Association for Continence (NAFC), is a nonprofit organization whose mission is to educate the public about the causes and cures for incontinence. We offer a free packet of information, including a brochure titled "Seeking Treatment" to help prepare for a visit with a doctor to make a first visit as productive as possible.

Dear Abby

Please encourage any of your readers with questions about incontinence to call our NAFC toll-free number (800) 252-3337. It is staffed by a full-time health educator to answer questions for callers. We also have a Web site, www.nafc.org, filled with information about incontinence, treatment and management options.

I strongly encourage "Can't Stand It" to contact NAFC for information and present it to her boyfriend so he can be educated and encouraged to seek help. Incontinence can be managed or treated — and it will allow both of them to improve their quality of life together.

— Nancy Muller, Executive Director, NAFC

Dear Nancy: Since printing that letter, I have received letters from readers informing me that incontinence can be caused by a variety of ailments — which include allergies, spinal cord problems, a sleep disorder and kidney disease, to name a few. Most of these problems can be dealt with if a person is willing to discuss them with a medical professional.

"Can't Stand It" indicated that her boyfriend steadfastly refused to see a doctor about his problem, and she had reached the end of her rope in waking up every morning in a wet bed, so I told her it was time to say goodbye. If this was something he couldn't help, I wouldn't have been so quick to say it. However, it's hard to find sympathy for a person who is not willing to help himself.

Letters for this column — with your name and phone number — should be addressed to Dear Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles CA 90069. Readers can write to Abby on the Internet at <http://www.uepress.com/dearabby> Universal Press Syndicate

Fight over food divides family

Dear Annie: My in-laws live 350 miles away and are very caring folks. The problem is, my mother-in-law has a major control issue with her cooking.

Mom expects us to eat and enjoy everything she makes. When we visit, she plans all our meals and gets upset if we want to eat out.

One time she forced a spoonful into our 6-year-old daughter's mouth, and when our daughter threw up at the table, Mom smacked her hard across the back of her head.

On our most recent visit, I wasn't very hungry, so I didn't put food on my plate. Mom stormed out of the dining room and refused to speak to me. I ended up having to apologize profusely for not being hungry. My 47-year-old husband has spent his entire life in fear of not eating, and he won't confront her about her attitude, so when I politely speak up, I am the bad guy.

How do I get out of this crazy, stressful battle over food?

Annie's Mailbox

— Not Hungry Daughter-In-Law

Dear Not Hungry: Smacking the back of your daughter's head really threw us over the edge. Mom is way out of line.

Encourage your child to eat what Mom prepares, but when that is not possible, tell Mom, "Sorry, Susie isn't hungry." If she persists, repeat the sentence and remove Susie's plate. If Mom becomes angry, tell Susie she can leave the table. If Mom raises a hand against your child, take your family and leave the house. Inform Mom that you will come back when she settles down. Do not ever raise your voice.

Your husband should not take his mother's side, nor should he try to placate you into letting Mom have her way. Mom will be plenty angry, but do NOT back down.

Dear Annie: When I was a teenager, some friends spray-painted obscenities on a neighbor's garage one night when I was with them. We all were arrested. Even though I did not directly participate, I lost my part-time job and the respect of my friends and family.

I assumed this indiscretion would be quickly forgotten, but that's not what happened. People still ask, "Aren't you the guy who spray-painted Joe's garage?" even though the incident was 25 years ago. My own parents, now elderly, will sometimes bring it up, so I can never put it behind myself.

How long am I going to have to live with this? How should I respond when people bring it up?

Perplexed in Pennsylvania
Dear Perplexed: Scandal has a long memory. The best response is, "Yes, I made a terrible mistake, but it was a long time ago." Then change the subject.

Timberwolves still have issues to settle

BY ANDRES YBARRA
The Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — The Minnesota Timberwolves are among the favorites in the Western Conference, largely because all the key players are back from last season's team that nearly made the NBA Finals.

But with a week to go until the regular season, two of their biggest stars — Latrell Sprewell and Sam Cassell — have raised doubts about their long-term futures with the team. And Wally Szczerbiak has made it clear he wants a bigger role.

Cassell and Sprewell, who form Minnesota's "Big Three" with league MVP Kevin Garnett, want contract extensions.

Sprewell has publicly said he wants an extension before he is traded against New York or he'll ask for a sign-and-trade deal after the season or become a free agent. Cassell was upset enough about not getting an extension that he skipped the team's media day and first day of training camp.

"Me and Sprewell, we deserve extensions," Cassell said this week. "There's no other way to say it. You can't sugarcoat it."

The Big Three formed the NBA's highest-scoring trio last season and led the Wolves to the Western Conference finals, where they lost in six games to the Los Angeles Lakers. But Cassell barely played in that series because of a hip injury that caused painful back spasms.

Cassell is convinced the outcome would've been different had he been healthy.

"I know for a fact we'd be celebrating our first championship in the city right now," Cassell said.

Cassell, never one to bite his tongue, thinks the Wolves need to pay more if they want to keep him and Sprewell, who wasn't available to reporters after practice Tuesday.

Neither Sprewell's agent, Robert Gist, nor Timberwolves owner Glen Taylor immediately returned phone messages seeking comment.

Cassell's agent, Charles Tucker, couldn't immediately be reached.

Kevin McHale, Minnesota's vice president of basketball operations, said he also wants to get Sprewell an extension before the season starts. Sprewell is due to make $14.6 million this season. Last week, he told the St. Paul Pioneer Press he doesn't want to take a pay cut, but at 34, the Wolves could be hesitant to coach Flip Saunders declined to comment on the potential distractions.

Then there's Szczerbiak, who has made it clear he wants his starting spot back.

A foot injury sidelined him for the first 53 games last season, and the Wolves signed Trenton Hassell to take his place. Hassell made a name as a defensive specialist and earned a six-year, $27 million contract.

But Szczerbiak is healthy again, and Saunders must decide between Szczerbiak's shooting or Hassell's defense for the starting lineup.

Hassell said he'd take a back seat to Szczerbiak if the coaches want him to.

"Whatever is best for the team," Hassell said. "The main thing is to win. If it helps the team for him to start, let him go. It doesn't really matter to me."

Minnesota Timberwolves' Wally Szczerbiak, who was sidelined by a foot injury for the first 53 games last season, wants to get back in the starting lineup.

Not so for Szczerbiak — he wants to play a lot of minutes. He came off the bench in all 28 of his appearances last season and is eager to return to his All-Star level from 2002, even if it means being traded. Szczerbiak has popped up in trade rumors for the past couple of years. The latest involved Portland and New York this offseason.

"I'll play basketball anywhere. I don't care," Szczerbiak said. "It's a business, if you get traded, no hard feelings either way, you've just got to play elsewhere."

Still, Szczerbiak — signed to a six-year, $63 million deal last season — said Tuesday he's committed to helping the Wolves and thinks he'll be with them for the long term.

"It looks like it," he said. And that's more than Sprewell and Cassell can say.

"I'm confident. I think [Sprewell] is confident it will get done. If not, we both have got to make decisions," Cassell said.

Florida denies making contact with Spurrier

BY MARK LONG
The Associated Press

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Florida athletic director Jeremy Foley denied a report Tuesday that school officials have contacted former coach Steve Spurrier about replacing Ron Zook.

According to ESPN.com, the school contacted Spurrier to gauge his interest in returning to coach the Gators and wanted an answer in the next 24 hours.

"There's absolutely no basis to that at all. It's false," Foley said. "We've got a little time. Why would 24 hours make a difference?"

Florida fired Zook on Monday after he posted a 20-13 record in two-plus seasons — just 14 fewer losses than Spurrier had in 12 seasons. Zook will coach the final four games this season, but the search for his replacement could begin with Spurrier.

He resigned from the NFL's Washington Redskins after two seasons and could be open to returning to his alma mater.

"I'll talk about that another time," Spurrier said Monday at a charity golf event near Orlando. "I don't think there's anything that I can say that is really appropriate."

Oklahoma coach Bob Stoops, Utah coach Urban Meyer and Louisville coach Bobby Petrino also could be possible replacements. Foley said he would not talk to any coaches with current jobs until after the season.

Spurrier's defensive coordinator for three seasons at Florida, Stoops said he and Spurrier had talked recently enough to know he shot a 73 during his charity round.

But Stoops declined to give details about their conversation.

"That's not for me to talk about," Stoops said Tuesday. "Whatever he wants I'm all for. Though I talk to Coach frequently, that wouldn't be appropriate for me to talk about what we're talking about and what his feelings are."

Genetic condition forces Ga. Tech lineman to quit

BY PAUL NEWBERRY
The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Brad Brezina feels just what might be the worst part of all.

If he wants to lift weights, go right ahead. If there's a pickup game down at the basketball court, he's in.

He just can't do the one thing he loves more than anything — play football for Georgia Tech.

"I went and ran the other day. I'm in shape. I feel good," Brezina said. "My body feels perfectly fine to go out there and practice. It's tougher when I think about it in that regard."

With a heavy heart, he has had to walk from the sport that took his father all the way to the NFL. Brezina, a sophomore who started the first four games of the season at offensive guard, had little choice after experts on both coasts diagnosed a genetic condition that causes a narrowing of the spinal cord.

If he continued to play, one good leg in the right spot could have left him paralyzed from the neck down.

"I'm not going to be stupid about this," Brezina said. "I had to look at it from all angles, but when you get reports from two experts in the field, you're not going to overlook it by any means. There's no doubt this is the right decision."

Not that it's easy to accept. Football runs in the family, most notably with his father. Greg Brezina was a linebacker good in the Atlanta Falcons in the 1960s and '70s. His son yearned to follow the same career path.

"It's been real tough," Brad said, struggling to hold back his tears. "This is something I've had a passion for since I was a kid. It's just one of those things you grow up wanting to do."

After starting his college career on the defensive line, Brezina shifted to offensive this season. He earned a starting job and seemed to have a bright future.

One jarring hit against Miami changed all that.

Brezina has watched the play on film. He was good all the right things as he prepared to block a linebacker, bend up, shoulders back — but he knew right away that something was wrong. Crumpling to the turf at Bobby Dodd Stadium, Brezina couldn't move his arms. It felt like a few hundred pounds.

"It's something I would not want to do again," he said somberly.

Still, reality didn't set in immediately. Brezina regained the feeling in his limbs and wanted to go back in the game. He thought it was merely a "stinger" — a jarring of the spine that is common in football, causing temporary paralysis in extreme cases.

Wisely, the trainers recognized that his condition was more serious.

"There was a tingling in my shoulders," Brezina said. "I felt like needles were being stuck in me. That's a sign of the nerves getting bruised in the spinal cord. It's a pretty serious deal. You don't mess around with that."

It's called spinal stenosis. Doctors found that Brezina's spinal column narrows from 15 millimeters at the base of his neck to 11 millimeters at the top — a tiny but significant difference.

Pacers C Foster to miss 4-6 weeks

The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Indiana Pacers center Jeff Foster was to have hip surgery Wednesday and is expected to miss four to six weeks, further depleting the team's front court.

Foster is scheduled to undergo arthroscopic surgery on his right hip. He has been hampered by the injury since he began training camp. But he didn't believe it was serious until it flared up this week.

"It's a clean-out type thing, not a tightening thing or reattachment deal," Pacers coach Rick Carlisle said Tuesday. "But it is being weird. So we'll just have to see."

Foster's emergence as a legitimate hustler and rebounder played a big role in the Pacers' success last season. He averaged 6.1 points and 7.4 rebounds in his first season as a starter.

Scott Pollard, who has looked sharp in the preseason, will fill Foster's spot in the starting lineup.

Foster's injury is the latest to hit the front court.

Forward/center Jermaine O'Neal could be held out of the remaining preseason games with a nagging ligament strain in his left foot, and rookie David Harrison has missed time with a shoulder injury.

Carlisle said O'Neal is working his way back.

"The prescription for him at the beginning was rest," Carlisle said. "He's been shooting the last couple of days. He's got to make sure he's healthy before he plays."

Carlisle said he hoped O'Neal and the other players would be healthy before the Nov. 3 regular-season opener.

Grizzlies center Wright suspended for one game

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Memphis Grizzlies center Lorenzen Wright was suspended for one game by the NBA on Tuesday.

Wright was suspended for shoving Milwaukee center Zaza Pachulia during Memphis' 97-75 exhibition victory over the Bucks last Thursday.

Wright will serve the suspension during the Grizzlies' season opener, Nov. 3 against Washington in Memphis.

Robinson, Dalemberf demoted from Sixers' starting lineup

PHILADELPHIA — Glenn Robinson and Samuel Dalemberf have been demoted from the Philadelphia 76ers' starting lineup, coach Jim O'Brien announced Tuesday as he put the first stamp on his new team.

O'Brien named veterans Aaron McKie and Marc Jackson and rookie Andre Iguodala to the starting lineup. McKie beat out Willie Green to be the starter at shooting guard. Iguodala gets Robinson's old spot at small forward, and Jackson takes over from Dalemberf at center.

Allen Iverson, who will play point guard rather than shooting guard, and Kenny Thomas will be the other starters for Philadelphia's season-opener Nov. 3 against Boston.

Cardinals are frightful of baseball's biggest stage

St. Louis has unraveled after season of success

BY BERNIE MIKLASZ

St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Commentary

ST. LOUIS — From the St. Louis view, all of the most likely possibilities made sense. Locally the hope and the belief was that the Cardinals would win a competitive World Series, but no one of sound mind would be surprised to see the Red Sox prevail. Win or lose, we were in for a show. This World Series featured two traditional old-school teams representing two celebrated baseball towns. This World Series would be close, and it would be colorful, and it would be good for baseball.

Only one scenario seemed impossible: that the Cardinals would walk onto the big stage and freeze. No, not this year, not in a time of 100 years of baseball. We never imagined that the Cardinals would play so hard and come so far, only to embarrass themselves. That they'd go down so quickly after a summer of fiery pride and purpose, after an early autumn of charging back to win the National League Championship Series, and after winning 112 games by playing baseball the right way, the Cardinal way.

On a dank Tuesday night at Busch Stadium, under an eerie Edgar Allan Poe moon, the Cardinals became ungloved, and their season unraveled, and we did not quite believe what we were seeing. In a humiliating 4-1 victory over the befuddled home nine, the Red Sox all but ripped down the decorative World Series bunting at Busch and replaced it with funeral crepe.

The Red Sox lead the Series 3-0. The Cardinals are down to the last promises that they, the Cardinals, can keep. In an odd twist, the Cardinals will pull inspiration from these very same Red Sox, who beat all odds and rearranged the order of the baseball universe by erasing a 3-0 deficit to shock the Yankees with a miracle comeback in the American League Championship Series.

"We have to fight back," left fielder Reggie Sanders said. "This is a team that has been tough all year at coming from behind. This thing isn't over until the last out. It's hard to believe when you're down 0-3, but it isn't over."

Officially, it won't be over until the Red Sox complete the formality of winning another game, and we see the riot police ring the streets around Fenway Park to prevent Boston from burning down.

Cardinals fans are undoubtedly dazed, wondering what happened to the magical season. Tuesday was supposed to be the first night of the comeback. Instead, it became the beginning of the end.

The highlight was the ceremonial first pitch, with Stan Musial tossing the baseball to Bob Gibson.

If only "The Man" were 25 years old again, just like 1946, when the Cardinals edged Boston in seven games.

If only Gibby were 31 again, just like 1967, when he won three games to lead the Cardinals to a seven-game triumph over the Red Sox.

After Musial and Gibson left our field of dreams, the nightmare began.

On the national stage, the Cardinals turned into Ashlee Simpson.

Cardinals players ran into outs on the baselines with knucklehead lapses, betraying the fundamental intelligence that made them an admired thinking-fan's team over the past seven months.

In the first inning, Larry Walker tagged up on a shallow fly ball to left field and was thrown out at the plate by Manny Ramirez. But don't heap the abuse on Walker; he decided to bolt when Albert Pujols, who had been stationed on second base, suddenly broke for third, apparently unaware that Ramirez had made the catch. Pujols would have been doubled off, anyway, so Walker took a shot at scoring. It was actually a heads-up play by Walker.

But in the third inning, the Cardinals made a whopper, a Buckner.

With Cardinals pitcher Jeff Suppan on third and the Red Sox pitcher back and conceding a run, Suppan inexplicably stayed put instead of following third-base coach Jose Oquendo's emphatic orders to go. The confusion cost the Cardinals dearly and put this World Series on an irreversible downward slope. It was thrown out by first baseman David Ortiz when he tried to scramble back to third.

Instead of allowing a run, the Red Sox had a gift double play. How could that be?

"I shouted, 'Go, go, go!'" Oquendo said. "And Jeff must have thought I said, 'No, no, no.'"

Right then, right there, the energy went out of the Cardinals and their 2004 season.

The big guns of Pujols, Scott Rolen and Jim Edmonds remained silent and unthreatening. Through three games, the MVPs have five hits in 33 at-bats (151 with one RBI). They're hitless in Boston Red Sox third baseman Bill Mueller tags out St. Louis Cardinals pitcher Jeff Suppan after Suppan inexplicably returned to third base on a ground ball in Game 3 of the World Series. St. Louis, winner of 105 regular season games, has looked overmatched in the World Series.

11 at-bats with runners in scoring position. Rolen and Edmonds are one for 22, and the hit came on a bunt. And if we include No. 6 hitter Reggie Sanders in accounting, the 3-4-5-6 spots in the St. Louis lineup are five for 42, or 11.5.

This isn't a slump; it's a plague. And with the Cardinals' more menacing bats started to splinter, Red Sox starter Pedro Martinez cruised through the once-fearful lineup without resistance, retiring the last 14 he faced in seven shutout innings.

Cardinals fans repeatedly booed the home team.

Boisterous Boston fans showed up for Game 3 in substantial numbers and made their voices heard, chanting to their heroes, raising beer cups as if to salute the imminent end to the so-called Curse of the Bambino, turning Busch into an auxiliary Fenway Park for Red Sox Nation.

A local prominent athlete turned against the city he competes in.

Blues hockey forward Keith Tkachuk appeared on Fox during an in-game interview wearing full Red Sox gear and flaunted his devotion to Boston.

The Cardinals are going quietly, disappearing into the mist.

They've never led in this Series. They've scored two meaningless runs in the last 14 innings. You know the karma has changed when Ramirez and Ortiz are making defensive games.

What a downer for Cardinals fans.

What a stunning surrender by the Cardinals.

And now we know, just a little bit, how Red Sox fans felt from 1919 through 2003.

Independent panel to investigate fan death in Boston

The Associated Press

BOSTON — An independent panel led by a former U.S. attorney will investigate the death of a woman who was shot by police using pellet guns to subdue a crowd of rowdy baseball fans.

Police Commissioner Kathleen M. O'Toole announced the investigation Tuesday. Virginia Snelgrove, an Emerson College junior, was killed last week when she was hit in the eye by a pellet gun fired during a raucous street celebration that began after the Red Sox won the American League pennant.

Police ballistic balls, fired from guns similar to paintball guns, are meant to help police control large groups without causing injury.

The Boston Globe reported Wednesday that two of the officers who fired pepper balls into the crowd were not trained to use the weapons.

The manufacturer of the guns, FN Herstal, did train 29 Boston officers to use the weapons, said Buckley Mills, the company's deputy director of law enforcement sales, marketing, and training. Mills said officers are repeatedly told never to target a person's head or heart.

The Globe quoted two anonymous sources, including an officer involved with police weapons training and an individual briefed on the investigation, as saying Deputy Superintendent Robert O'Toole, who is not related to the commissioner, fired at a group of students who were climbing the grandstands behind Fenway Park's left field wall.

Robert O'Toole has not responded to repeated calls by The Associated Press seeking comment. His lawyer, Timothy M. Burke, gave the Globe a statement saying O'Toole was "personally devastated that the actions of the Boston police played any role in causing this tragedy and bringing such pain to the family."

The commissioner said the independent commission will be headed by former U.S. Attorney Donald K. Stern, who prosecuted mob figures and pursued a tax-evasion case against former state House Speaker Charles Flaherty.

Edgar Martinez wins Clemente Award

ST. LOUIS — Retiring Seattle Mariners designated hitter Edgar Martinez won the Roberto Clemente Award for excellence on the field and in the community.

Martinez, who spent all 18 of his major league seasons with the Mariners, has been paid to write a nearly a dozen charities and nonprofit organizations. The first Puerto Rican-born player to receive the honor, Martinez was given the award Tuesday by baseball commissioner Bud Selig and Roberto Clemente Jr.

The award is named after the former Pittsburgh Pirates outfielder, who died in a plane crash New Year's Eve 1972 on a flight to deliver relief supplies to earthquake victims in Nicaragua.

Arizona increases offer to Sexson

PHOENIX — The Arizona Diamondbacks made a new contract offer to slugger Richie Sexson on Tuesday, and planned interviews with two of the three finalists to become the team's manager.

General manager Joe Garagiola Jr. said he was with Sexson's agent Casey Close and made "a significantly improved proposal, which I believe was well received."

Garagiola would not talk about any details. The Diamondbacks are attempting to re-sign Sexson before he becomes a free agent after this season.

Steinbrenner summons executives

TAMPA, Fla. — Yankees owner George Steinbrenner summoned his top executives to Florida for meetings Tuesday, less than a week after New York became the first major league team to waste a 3-0 lead in a postseason series.

Five Yankees vice presidents met among themselves during the afternoon at the team's spring training complex, then were scheduled to attend a night meeting with Steinbrenner, team president Randy Levine and general manager Brian Cashman.

New York is expected to pursue outfielder Carlos Beltran after he becomes a free agent and to add pitchers. Former Yankees minor leaguers Eric Milton and Carl Pavano are among those available.

Red Sox, Cubs to meet in 2005

CHICAGO — Call it the Cursed Series. Or the Bambino vs. the Billy Goat.

The Chicago Cubs will host the Boston Red Sox for a three-game series June 10-12 next season, the teams' first meeting since the 1918 World Series. As Red Sox Nation knows all too well, that was the last time Boston won a World Series. Babe Ruth hadn't yet become a Yankee.

It also would be Boston's first trip to Wrigley Field. The Cubs' horses gained in the 1918 World Series were played across town at old Comiskey Park, because that ballpark was bigger.

Steelers downplay showdown with Pats

Cowher: 'There is a lot more left after this game'

BY ALAN ROBINSON
The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Ask the Pittsburgh Steelers about the New England Patriots' NFL record 21-game winning streak, and it's likely they will turn the question around.

What about their own four-game winning streak since rookie Ben Roethlisberger replaced injured Tommy Maddox at quarterback?

With the Steelers (5-1) a game up on the favored Ravens (4-2) in the AFC North and 10 games remaining, the Steelers understand the dangers of focusing too much attention on one regular-season game — even one that could bring an end to the Patriots' run.

That's why the Steelers are taking a low-key approach into Sunday's game in Pittsburgh, even if winning would substantially increase the national profile of a team that went 6-10 last season.

"We can't get too caught up and enamored with what they've done," coach Bill Cowher said Tuesday. "If we play our game, minimize the mistakes and try to seize some opportunities, hopefully it will fall the right way and we'll have an opportunity to win. We have to have to be on top of our game to win this."

Or, exactly how they have been since Roethlisberger took over.

Certainly, the opposition has been suspect — the combined record of their beaten opponents is 10-23 — but that doesn't minimize how well Roethlisberger has played and how quickly he has settled in.

Roethlisberger wasn't expected

Ben Roethlisberger (7), 4-0 as Pittsburgh's starting quarterback, expects to get plenty of pressure and different looks from New England's defense on Sunday. The Patriots have won 21 consecutive games.

ed to play much, if at all, this season, yet is fourth in passer rating behind Daunte Culpepper, Peyton Manning and Donovan McNabb. Roethlisberger's 69 percent completion rate isn't far off the NFL record of 70.55 by Cincinnati's Ken Anderson in 1982, and his ability to make plays while on the move has added a dimension to Pittsburgh's offense.

Just like the Steelers' offense is interested in learning how far he's come, he's likely to find out as the Steelers meet the NFL's only two remaining unbeaten, the Patriots and the Eagles (6-0), on successive Sundays in Pittsburgh.

Roethlisberger has been warned by teammates what to expect from Patriots coach Bill Belichick of what — namely, a whole lot of defense — hasn't seen before.

"I'm sure there will be something [different] he will see," Cowher said. "They'll give us some things we'll have to adjust to. But we can't get too caught up in what they do. We have to establish our plan, play smart, control the clock and make some third downs."

The Steelers found out three seasons ago how confusing the Patriots' defense can be to an experienced quarterback. Then, Pittsburgh was a big favorite in the AFC championship game, only to have a confused Kordell Stewart throw three interceptions during a 24-17 New England victory that led to the first of the Patriots' two Super Bowl championships in three seasons.

Wide receiver Hines Ward still remembers how the Steelers' offense scurried to adjust on the fly as the Patriots repeatedly gave them defensive looks they didn't expect and didn't practice for.

"I'm sure with Ben, they will have a special package for him," Ward said. "But we can't put it all on Ben's shoulders. We can't say, 'You've got to pass the ball for us to win.'"

Just like the Steelers won't say they've made their season should they end the Patriots' streak.

"Sure you get excited about (the game), and I'm not going to downplay that. There's nothing to downplay," Cowher said. "It's a big game. It's why you're in this game, to play in games like this. But there is a lot more left after this game. Nothing will be accomplished or defined with this game."

Meanwhile, Maddox (torn right elbow tendon) is throwing lightly for the first time since being injured Sept. 19, but is not close to being ready to practice. Inside linebacker Kendrick Bell, out all season with ankle and groin injuries, is expected to practice Wednesday and might play Sunday.

Ravens All-Pro Ogden sidelined with leg injury

The Associated Press

OWINGS MILLS, Md. — Baltimore Ravens tackle Jonathan Ogden is expected to miss three to four weeks with a pulled left hamstring, although the 2003 All-Pro player intends to shorten his absence by adhering to a rigorous rehabilitation program.

"They say three to four weeks, but we'll see," Ogden said Wednesday. "Doing different things, who knows, maybe I can get back sooner than expected. I'm pushing to get healthy as soon as possible."

Ogden is listed as questionable for Sunday's game against the Philadelphia Eagles, but he said there's no way he can play.

The Ravens will also be without All-Pro running back Jamal Lewis, who will finish his two-game suspension for violating the NFL substance-abuse policy. Baltimore also will likely play without Pro Bowl tight end Todd Heap, who has been sidelined since the second week of the season with a sprained ankle.

The 6-foot-9, 345-pound Ogden, injured during the fourth quarter of Sunday's 20-6 victory over Buffalo, has played in all but one game since the beginning of the 2001 season. He missed this season's opener in Cleveland with a knee injury — a game Baltimore lost 20-3. He had never a hamstring, so he's uncertain how long he will be sidelined.

"People who have had them say it takes a little while to get back. I'll just see where I go with it," he said. "My goal is to be able to get back as fast as possible. Never having done this before, I don't really know what the timetable is."

Eagles RB Westbrook questionable with rib injury

PHILADELPHIA — Running back Brian Westbrook has a cracked rib and is questionable for the Eagles' game Sunday against Baltimore.

Defenses DT Tim Brown (back) out for rest of season.
Defenses DE Shaun Foster (broken collarbone) out for rest of season.

The rib injury was revealed on the first X-ray, but more tests revealed a small crack of the first rib, Eagles head trainer Kirk Burkholder said Wednesday. The normal recovery time for that kind of injury is four to six weeks, but Westbrook won't necessarily be out that long, Burkholder said.

Westbrook, Philadelphia's leading rusher, was hurt during the fourth quarter of the Eagles' overtime victory against Cleveland. He leads the Eagles with 458 yards rushing. He also has 31 catches for 249 yards.

Bills RB McGahee says he's starting vs. Cards

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — Buffalo Bills running back Willis McGahee told a national radio network on Tuesday that he expects to get the second start of his NFL career when Buffalo hosts Arizona this weekend.

Without providing details as to what he's been informed by the team, McGahee made the announcement on James Brown Sporting News Radio.

"Yes, I will be starting this game," McGahee said in a tape of the show relayed by the network for The Associated Press. "Like I say, when the opportunity comes, I'm just going to take advantage of it."

The Bills were unavailable for comment. Coach Mike Mularkey is expected to address lineup changes during his news conference on Wednesday.

The Bills (1-5) have yet to score 21 points in a game this season and have no rushing touchdowns.

McGahee, Buffalo's 2003 first-round draft pick, would be starting ahead of fourth-year veteran Travis Henry, who struggled in Buffalo's 20-6 loss at Tampa Bay last weekend. McGahee finished with 16 carries for 58 yards, while Henry had seven carries for 27 yards.

Buffalo's 2003 first-round draft choice Willis McGahee had 111 yards rushing against Miami two weeks ago in his first NFL start.

Krenzel to start for Bears

LAKE FOREST, Ill. — Rookie Craig Krenzel will make his first NFL start Sunday night for the Chicago Bears when they face the San Francisco 49ers at Soldier Field.

Krenzel played the second half of last week's 19-9 loss to Tampa Bay after relieving Jonathan Quinn and completed nine of 19 passes for 69 yards with an interception. He guided the Bears to their only touchdown.

Broncos RB Griffin out for season with ACL tear

DENVER — Denver running back Quentin Griffin is out for the year.

The team placed Griffin on injured reserve Wednesday, two days after he tore the anterior cruciate ligament in his right knee during a 23-10 loss at Cincinnati.

In six games, the second-year back from Oklahoma rushed for 311 yards on 85 carries (3.7) and two touchdowns. He set a franchise record for most yards rushing in a season opener when he ran for 156 yards and two scores against Kansas City.

However, Griffin lost the starting job to Reuben Droughs after fumbles in consecutive games.

Favre's wife to undergo breast cancer treatment

The Associated Press

GULFPORT, Miss. — The wife of Green Bay Packers quarterback Brett Favre was diagnosed with breast cancer, more bad news in a year full of heartache for the family.

Deanna Favre was recently released from Sloan Kettering Cancer Center in New York after undergoing a lumpectomy, Bonita Favre, the quarterback's mother, told The Sun Herald on Monday.

Deanna Favre will undergo chemotherapy treatments that could last up to five months and is expected to make a full recovery, Bonita Favre said.

The Packers had no comment on the matter, and Brett Favre was unavailable Tuesday. He usually addresses the media on Wednesday.

In December, Brett's father, Irvin, died from a heart attack. Deanna's brother, Casey Tynes, 24, was killed three weeks ago in an ATV accident on Brett Favre's property near his home in Oak Grove.

Favre was told about his wife's cancer on Oct. 14 and he left practice to be with his family for a day before the Packers' game against Detroit on Oct. 17.

"Brett was relieved to learn that the situation is not as bad as it could have been," Deanna's brother-in-law, Scott Favre said. "We think that they got (all of the cancer) out."

Favre Favre runs the Brett Favre Foundation, which has raised more than $1 million for disadvantaged or disabled children in Wisconsin and Mississippi.

"The family has been through a great deal and we will get through this," Bonita Favre said. "We would like to thank everyone for the prayers and support. We're a strong family and with the help of the Lord, we'll get through this."

Against Colts, Vermeil shuns revenge factor

By Doug Tucker

The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Dick Vermeil would prefer not to hear the "R" word — you know, "revenge" — tossed around Arrowhead Stadium this week.

Yes, the 38-31 playoff loss to Indianapolis on Jan. 11 was one of the most disappointing in team history. Yes, the Colts did not have to punt once while running the Chiefs' 13-3 regular-season campaign, which had earned the team home-field advantage in the playoffs.

And yes, Peyton Manning and the Colts will be back in town Sunday.

But Vermeil would never call it a revenge game for his team.

"I'm not much on using those kind of (motivators). I try to use things that are more appropriate to the time, what makes the difference this week," Vermeil said Tuesday.

To me, true motivation of a football team is a never-ending process. There are certain things that stimulate it a little more one week than the other. But real deep team motivation is more a chemistry of a football team and the kind of players you have on it and the environment they're in and how they work together and how they care about each other. Then it becomes more consistent."

Nevertheless, beating the Colts (4-2) would give fans something to enjoy while bringing the Chiefs (2-4) closer to .500.

Vermeil does not deny the bitter loss to the Colts was on the minds of his coaches and players throughout the offseason.

"That game left a real sour taste in our mouths," said safety Jerome Woods.

Titans' gameplan crumbling '04

Injuries, player moves pointing toward rebuilding for Tennessee

BY TERESA M. WALKER
The Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Six hours before kickoff, doctors removed Shad Meier's appendix, leaving the Tennessee Titans with only one healthy tight end: rookie Ben Troupe.

That forced coaches to scrap all plays with two tight ends, a staple of the offense, and drop plays specially designed for Troupe to use his physical skills and minimize his inexperience.

After the last-minute changes, the Titans lost for the first time to the team that replaced them in Houston, the Texans.

"Every week, there's something wrong injury-wise, and it's very frustrating," Steve McNair said.

The Titans thought they could sneak under the salary cap this year, rely on the draft to restock the roster and avoid the rebuilding of teams in similar situations faced.

So much for those plans. Now the franchise that entered 2004 tied for most wins since 1999 is trying to salvage a season that started with Super Bowl dreams and is being undermined by injuries and inexperience.

"It's kind of a new situation for us," coach Jeff Fisher admitted. General manager Floyd Reese took over this franchise in 1994, forced to rebuild a playoff team torn apart by the NFL's new salary cap. He watched his Houston Oilers go 2-14 that season.

Since 1995, Reese and Fisher have worked with a simple philosophy: build through the draft, identify a core of top players each season, let pricey veterans leave and rely on the coaching staff to teach the youngsters.

The strategy paid off a 56-24 record from 1999 to 2003, with an AFC championship and playoff berths in four of the five seasons.

But the Titans, crunched by the cap, made too many wrong moves this offseason, and they are paying for it.

They let Jevon Kearse and Robaire Smith leave for big money in Philadelphia and Houston, respectively, and tried to replace them by drafting five defensive linemen.

Kearse now has four sacks in Philadelphia and has been a defensive catalyst for the Eagles

(6-0). His Tennessee replacements have been so ineffective Fisher had to switch Kevin Carter back from tackle to end.

The Titans also traded receiver Justin McCareins to the New York Jets for a second-round draft pick. But that left defensive end Travis LaBoy, sat out the first three games with injuries before getting two sacks last weekend in a 20-3 loss at Minnesota.

Reese did replace retiring tight end Frank Wyche by re-signing

Tennessee Titans WR Eddie Berlin (82) throws down a cup of ice as he sits with CB Michael Waddell (36) and WR Derrick Mason (85) in the closing moments of their 20-10 loss to the Houston Texans on Oct. 17.

Erron Kinney and Meier. But the Titans released their leading career rusher, Eddie George, leaving a leadership vacuum that has yet to be filled.

George's replacement, Chris Brown, has been the only bright spot on offense, but now opponents are game-planning to stop him.

And there's all the injuries.

Outside linebacker Peter Simon tore left knee ligaments on the third day of training camp, becoming one of four Titans lost for the season. Four others have missed at least one start. They had 14 players on the injury report last week, forcing them to play two rookies on the offensive line — with McNair already banged up.

They also can't stop hurting themselves.

The Titans have the second most penalties in the NFL, 53, and only Oakland has more yards in penalties (462-432). Pro Bowl receiver Derrick Mason yanked off his helmet in anger after a late incompletion in the Oct. 17 loss to Houston. Right tackle Fred Miller wiped out a key fourth-down conversion at the Minnesota 2 by pushing Kenelchi Udezue for what he thought was a late hit last Sunday.

But even then, Tennessee might not be 2-5 for the first time since Fisher's first full season in 1995 if McNair was healthy enough to carry the offense.

Hobbled by a bruised chest that put him in the hospital last month and has forced him out of three games, McNair has only shown flashes of the quarterback who was the NFL's most accurate passer in 2003. McCareins has been missed, and McNair hasn't been able to stretch the field with 6-foot-4 speedster Tyrone Calico out for the year (left knee). That leaves defenses double-teaming Mason and the remaining receivers either running the wrong route or dropping the ball.

McNair just wants to rest and heal up, and the Titans should let him do just that with their bye sandwiched between home games with Cincinnati (2-4) and Chicago (1-5).

When the Titans started 1-4 in 2002, Fisher ordered some veterans to answer questions from the media during his weekly news conference. That team rebounded and played in the AFC championship game.

This year, Fisher hasn't publicly criticized anyone, staying busy keeping players from pointing fingers. He is the picture of optimism.

"I don't think you can do them justice by having a different expectation," he said.

Well, maybe. But the team's scouts might want to get ready for the Titans' highest draft pick in a decade.

Big-play offense big difference for unbeaten Eagles

BY ROB MAADDI
The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Donovan McNabb drops back, throws the ball downfield and watches Terrell Owens, or Todd Pinkston or Freddie Mitchell make a catch for another big gain.

That's what has become of the Philadelphia Eagles' version of the West Coast offense. Gone are the dunks and dunks, replaced with deep passes that stretch the field and produce quick scores.

Through six games, the Eagles have 28 plays of 20 yards or longer, including 10 plays of 40 yards or more. Last year, they had 57 plays of 20 yards or more and 12 plays of 40 yards or longer. In 2002, they had 54 plays of 20 yards or more and just 10 plays of 40 yards or longer.

They won 12 games each of the last two seasons, but lost the NFC championship game at home both years, scoring just 13 points combined in the two defeats. The Eagles are 6-0 this season, hoping to reach the conference title game for the fourth straight season.

Their high-powered offense finally might get them to the Super Bowl.

"It's very hard to drive the field and it is very hard to go 14, 15, or 16 plays," offensive coordinator Brad Childress said, explaining the offense's seemingly new philosophy. "Somewhere something big has to happen for you. If you are not swinging that bat or looking down the field or calling a play that has the chance to go down the field, you have no chance."

The addition of Owens is the main reason the Eagles are having so much success connecting on big plays. The four-time Pro Bowl wide receiver has nine catches of at least 20 yards and six receptions for 40 yards or longer.

Owens caught touchdown passes of 39 and 40 yards in Sunday's 34-31 overtime victory in Cleveland. He also has TD catches of 20, 45 and 29 yards among his eight scoring receptions this season.

"Our mind-set right from training camp has been aggressive," Owens said. "That's what Coach Reid has often tried to instill in us. That's because of the weapons we have on offense."

When Owens becomes the focus of the defense, Pinkston, Mitchell or tight ends Chad Lewis and L.J. Smith often come open, creating opportunities for big gains.

Pinkston caught a 65-yard pass on the first play against the Browns, and also has a 53-yard reception this season. Mitchell had a 48-yard catch earlier in the season and nearly caught a long TD pass against the Browns. Smith's longest catch is 27 yards and No. 4 wideout Greg Lewis has a 24-yard reception.

"When you have a guy like T.O., it opens up a lot of opportunities for other guys as well," McNabb said.

A four-time Pro Bowl quarterback, McNabb came into the season with a career passer rating of 79.3, a completion percentage of 57, two four-TD games and five 300-yard games.

He already has thrown four TDs twice and has three 300-yard performances this season. His completion percentage is 65.7, and his quarterback rating of 105.6 is third in the NFL behind Daunte Culpepper (124.0) and Peyton Manning (116.2).

Overall, McNabb has thrown for 1,753 yards, 13 TDs and three interceptions, and run for two scores.

Philadelphia Eagles wide receiver Terrell Owens (81) has six receptions of at least 40 yards and eight TD catches this season.

IOC urges Beijing to get ready for 2008, avoid Athens-like delays

The Associated Press

BEIJING — The IOC has a word of advice for organizers of the 2008 Olympics — prepare.

Determined to avoid a repeat of the construction delays that threatened the Athens Games, Olympic officials arrived in Beijing on Wednesday.

"You have to start your preparation early enough, all your operational planning," International Olympic Committee executive director Gilbert Felli said during a news conference. "It is very complicated, the operations aspect of it."

Athens put the finishing touches on venues with only days remaining. The IOC prefers that facilities be finished a year ahead of time so they can be tested, Felli said.

China is actually slowing its Olympics construction from its initial ambitious pace following IOC concerns about cash flow. It had planned to build 10 stadiums but will now build five to ensure that venue costs stay below $2 billion. Beijing also expects to spend $24.2 billion on new subway lines, roads and other facilities by 2008.

IOC delegates will meet with Chinese organizers for several days to discuss such issues as sports, marketing, finances and media, committee spokeswoman Giselle Davies said. IOC President Jacques Rogge is to meet Chinese President Hu Jintao and the head of the Beijing Organizing Committee for the Olympic Games.

Sports briefs

A delegation led by Athens 2004 president Gianna Angelopoulos-Daskalaki will meet with Chinese organizers so "there is a transfer of knowledge," Davies said. That way, "there is less need to, what we say, reinvent the wheel," she added.

R. Gordon leaving Childress to start own team

WELCOM, N.C. — Robby Gordon is leaving Richard Childress Racing at the end of the season to drive for what he hopes will be his own Nextel Cup team in 2005. "Now is the time for me to start my future as an owner at NASCAR's highest level," he said Tuesday.

Gordon was co-owner of a short-lived Cup team in 2000 with John Menard and Mike Held. Gordon then drove for several teams in 2001 before winding up with Childress and winning the season-ending race at New Hampshire. That victory earned Gordon a full-time ride with RCR.

Gordon, who has run a part-time Busch Series schedule this year with his own team, said he has been putting the pieces in place for a Cup team for most of 2004.

"We don't have anything to announce yet for next season," he said. "We hope to make some announcements soon."

Gordon and Childress both said the parting is amicable, although the owner put the former open-wheel racing star on probation after he started an accident at New Hampshire in September that seriously damaged the championship hopes of title contenders Tony Stewart and Jeremy Mayfield.

Bowling Green suspends seven hockey players

BOWLING GREEN, Ohio — Bowling Green suspended seven hockey players Tuesday, one day after a newspaper showed coach Scott Paluch a photo it said was of a nude player whose body was covered with profanity. Ryan Barnett, Steve Brudzewski, Bryan Dobek, Mike Falk, Don Morrison, Brett Pilkington and Alex Rogosheske were suspended for violating team policy, the school said in a statement.

Paluch and athletic director Paul Krebs declined to discuss the photo during a news conference announcing the suspensions.

The Sentinel-Tribune newspaper reported it received a photo Monday that showed a Bowling Green hockey player face down, with profanity and racial slurs scrawled on his body in colored marker.

The newspaper said it showed Paluch the photo.

The envelope containing the photo had a Canadian postmark but no return address, the newspaper said. It wasn't immediately clear where or when the photo was taken.

The photo showed eight men, at least five of whom are current players, the newspaper said.

Lukas banks on filly in Breeders' Classic

By BETH HARRIS

The Associated Press

GRAND PRAIRIE, Texas — The king of Breeders' Cup trainers is pursuing his record 18th victory on horse racing's biggest stage in a surprising way.

D. Wayne Lukas said Azeri will run against the boys in the $4 million Classic, instead of the $2 million Distaff, where the 2002 Horse of the Year would have been the likely favorite.

Azeri won the Distaff in 2002 but was injured and did not run in last year's race. By choosing the tougher Classic for the 6-year-old mare, Lukas is taking a shot at history.

She will be just the third female to run in the 1 1/4-mile Classic since the Breeders' Cup began in 1984, and would be the first to win it. Triptych was sixth in 1986, and Jolypha was third in 1992.

"We're going to swing for the fences," Lukas said Tuesday.

"She's already won the Distaff. We're going to see if we can do something that hasn't been done before."

Azeri was pre-entered in the Distaff and the Classic, and it was believed Lukas was leaning toward running her in the Distaff. After talking with owner Michael Paulson, though, the decision was made to give it another try against males.

"She's very good right now," Lukas said.

Paulson weighed the pros and cons of challenging the boys, then told Lukas he was going to go for it.

"He agonized over it," Lukas said.

Azeri is coming off a victory in the Spinster Stakes at Keeneland nearly three weeks ago. She has three victories in seven starts since Lukas took over as her trainer this year. Paulson fired Laura de Seroux after Azeri's 11-race winning streak was snapped last year. Hall of Famer Mike Smith, who rode Azeri to 15 wins in 18 starts, was dumped, too.

The mare has won 17 of 23 starts and earned $3,959,820.

Azeri ran against males for the first time at Belmont Park on May 31, finishing eighth in the Metropolitan Mile. Lukas compared Azeri's challenge to a poker game.

"This is Texas. The Breeders' Cup is kind of a Texas Hold 'Em, and we're going all-in," he said. "We're going to play our queen."

The 69-year-old trainer has a record 140 Breeders' Cup starters, with 17 victories and more than $18 million in earnings.

Martinez deftly handles Cardinals, puts Red Sox on path to Series sweep

BY BEN WALKER
The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — The Boston Red Sox are making this look too easy. Because at this rate, only a curse can stop them. So far, the St. Louis Cardinals can't.

With their baseball stars and lucky stars aligned, the Red Sox moved within one victory of their first World Series championship since 1918, cruising past the Cardinals 4-1 Tuesday night.

No one knows better than Pedro Martinez, Manny Ramirez and the wild-card Red Sox that a 3-0 lead can be overcome; they just became the first team to do it in the postseason, against the New York Yankees.

But no one knows better than the Red Sox how elusive that last win can be; four times since that last title they've been one victory away, and four times they've lost. "We're not going to relax that much," Martinez said. "I don't think our team's going to relax as much as the Yankees were."

Martinez made his long-awaited Series debut a special one, bailed out when Ramirez and David Ortiz did as much damage with their arms as bats.

Backed by the surprising show of defense, the Red Sox got in position to sweep the club that led the majors in wins this year.

And to think that last week, they were three outs from getting swept in the AL Championship Series.

"It's something you've got to notice. It's possible," Cardinals manager Tony La Russa said. "Hard not to get discouraged. They didn't."
